Blast in Boat Traps Four On Potomac; 2 Near Death

Blinded by Explosion, Two Couples Fight for Their Lives.

Injured Women Expected to Die

Yacht, Worth $15,000, Grounds and Burns to Water Line.

Trapped aboard a 50-foot yacht, afire on the Potomac River off Shepherds Landing, opposite Alexandria, Va., two men and two women, blinded by a terrific explosion, battled for their lives early yesterday and finally hurled themselves into the water as flames engulfed decks and cabins.

In Alexandria Hospital the two women, Mrs. Elizabeth Martin, 30, of 2022 Sixteenth street northwest, and Miss Ethel Weakley, 37, of 1613 Harvard street northwest, were reported near death yesterday. They were burned critically in attempting to escape from the ship's galley.

With them on the boat were Mrs. Martin's husband, Harold Martin, and Hugh Smith, local attorney, owner of the craft. The women probably owe their lives to prompt action of the men.

Blast Ends Excursion.

A deafening explosion ended their week-end pleasure excursion down the Potomac aboard Smith's yacht, Greyhound. Moments that followed saw enactment of a drama rivaling sea fiction.

The two men were in the pilot house. Under a rising midnight moon, the Greyhound glided through calm waters toward Chesapeake Bay. Mrs Martin and Miss Weakley were in the galley preparing a light lunch.

A sudden explosion caused flames to burst from the hold astern. The women were cornered, escape blocked by a blazing wall. Martin and Smith, leaving the boat to navigate itself, ran to the lower deck with fire extinguishers.

Women are Trapped.

Leaping flames, reflected against the sky and sending an array of dancing shadows across the dark waters, were beyond control. The women, screaming for help, were trapped.

As Martin and Smith donned heavy coats to plunge through the fire, the women, nearly suffocated, hurled themselves into the flames and, clothes afire, dropped exhausted in their companions' arms.

Jersey Firemen Lost on Way Here; Sought by Friends

An indefinite number of burly, red-helmeted firemen from Dumont, N. J., ddressed in their best uniforms, and riding in a shiny red Studebaker touring car, were lost yesterday in the wilderness of roads between Dumont and Washington.

The rest of the Dumont fire-eaters (en route to Alexandria for the firemen's convention) drove into Washington in style and headed immediately for police headquarters here yesterday afternoon. They asked the District law guardians to keep an eye out for the lost fire-wagon, which they described as probably wailing its siren lonesomely along the road somewhere.

Anyone esping the big, red car was asked to communicate with the main body of the Dumont firemen at the Circle Club, 1314 Connecticut avenue northwest.

Radical Labor Gang Beats Five Furriers

New York, Sept. 2 (AP).—Five men were slashed and beaten today by 15 men who broke into a furrier's loft swinging crowbars, clubs and knives, allegedly as the climax to labor union difficulties.

Police said they were told by Harry, Joseph and Charles Shick, who own the loft, that the crowd was made up of members of a radical union group who had tried without success to get the Shick employes to leave the American Federation of Labor and affiliate with their union.

Asa Walden, Oklahoma Primary Candidate, Dies

Ardmore, Okla., Sept. 2 (AP).—District Judge Asa E. Walden, 41, one of the most prominent jurists in Oklahoma, died unexpectedly in an Ardmore hospital this afternoon following an operation.

Judge Walden was also a member of the State court of tax reviews. He entered the race this year for Democratic nomination for Congress from the Third District, but was defeated in the primary.

Russ Columbo Killed By Pistol Explosion

Dance Orchestra Leader Shot Accidentally by Hollywood Friend.

Hollywood, Sept. 2 (AP).—Russ Columbo, 26, screen actor and Nationally known dance orchestra leader, died in a hospital here tonight a few hours after he was shot in the head by the accidental discharge of a pistol at the home of Lansing Brown, portrait photographer.

Brown, showing Columbo a French duelling pistol, accidentally dropped a lighted match on the cap, firing the pistol. The bullet hit a mahogany dresser, then ricocheted and struck Columbo.

Lansing said he did not know the pistol was loaded.

Columbo died in a hospital while preparations were being made for an operatoin to remove the bullet.

Brown, who had as his clients many of Hollywood's great and near-great, said he had known Columbo since 1924 and the singer was a frequent caller at his home.

"During my entire conversation with Russ," Brown told detectives, "I was absent-mindedly fooling with one of the guns. I was pulling back the trigger and clicking it time after time. I had a match in my left hand and when I clicked, evidently the match caught in between the hammer and the firing pin.

"There was an explosion. Russ slid to the side of his chair. I thought he was clowning. It was all mighty fast.

Young Sisters, Dead in Icebox, Fiend's Victims

Children, 6 and 7, Attacked and Then Doomed to Suffocation.

Sacramento, Calif., Sept. 2 (AP).—Two sisters, 6 and 7 years old, were criminally attacked before they were locked alive in the icebox in their ranch home near here and left to suffocate, an autopsy today disclosed.

The children, Maryann Paiva, 7, and Mary Paiva, 6, apparently fought to regain their freedom as they were slowly stifled in the box. Their fingers were torn and bloody, and in the corner of the icebox was a splotch of blood.

The bodies were discovered when the parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Paiva, returned to their home last night, after working in the hop fields all day.

After the autopsy report today, the sheriff's office launchd a search for an elderly man seen in the vicinity of the Paiva home, 18 miles from Sacramento.

An elderly man, officers said they had learned, had been unfriendly with Paiva and his family. They also learned the man had taken the Paiva children to his home on several occasions.

Sheriff's deputies planned an attempt to obtain information by questioning the victims' 2-year-old brother, who was found asleep on the floor near the ice box. If the boy witnessed the attack on his sisters, officers believed he might possibly lisp information which would put them on the trail of the attacker.

When the tragedy was discovered, it was first believed the girls had crawled into the ice box from curiosity and the door had locked behind them.

Their mother said her daughters had been attracted by the shiny new refrigerator and had attempted at least once to get inside.

Filipino Constitution To Deny Women Vote

Manila, Sept. 2 (AP).—The Manila Bulletin says a canvas of the Filipino constitutional convention, shows a majority opposed to women's suffrage in the Islands and that the proposal to enfranchise them is, as a result, "dead and buried."

The suffrage committee of the convention concluded a week's hearings Saturday and is expected to draft an adverse report on Monday, the newspaper adds.

$11,300 Savings Returned.

New York, Sept. 2 (U.P.).—Mrs. John Jankowski, of Port Washington, Iong Island., had her life savings of $11,300 back today. Mrs. Jankowski, police said, always kept her money in a small bag, sewed in her clothing. An unidentified woman found the bag in a cemetery and turned it over to police.

Japanese Kill 25 Kidnapers; Free American

Gunboat Rescues Nine Held Captive by Manchu Brigands.

Harbin, Manchuria, Sept. 2 (AP). After dramatically rescuing nine men, one of them an American, kidnaped by bandits near Wuchia Thursday night, Japanese troops gave chase to the outlaws and killed 25 of them. The commander of the rescuing Japanese gunboat reported.

Fifteen of the kidnapers were wounded in the fighting that followed the rescue, the commander said. He expressed the belief that he had accounted for the entire band.

Robert M. Lury, naturalized American who with his eight companions, seven Japanese and E. F. Johansen, Dane, were liberated by Japanese landing forces from the gunboat Konei early today, graphically described the horrors of their experience.

"We owe our lives to Kumetaro Murakami (Japanese employe of the Manchukuan government) who cried out despite threats that we would be killed if we shouted," he said.

Murakami's outcry brought the rescue party hurrying from the gunboat, which was steaming down the Sungari River, to the wooded sandbar where the bandits and their captives were concealed.

"Before that," Lury continued, "we were huddled in pits in the sand bank, constantly threatened by the bandits' revolvers.

"We thought our last day had come, and we are intensely grateful to the Japanese troops who saved us."

Airplanes spotted the bandits as they attempted to cross the Sungari River from their hiding place and helped direct the search.

The gunboats Konei and Hokei, with infantry landing parties aboard, were rushed to the place, near the town of Niujietzu, 40 miles southwest of Harbin, where their rescue was effected after a sharp brush with the bandits.

Lury and Johansen, both employes of an American film corporation, together with the seven

'Million-Dollar' Rains Cool Arid Arkansas

Little Rock, Ark., Sept. 2 (AP).—It rained in Arkansas today—more than a million dollars worth.

For the first time since mid-May, general rains, crop-healing and drought-relieving, swept over the State and there were near cloudbursts in some places. Approximately 4.5 inches fell in the vicinity of Fort Smith. Fayetteville reported a rise of 6 feet in the White River in the last 24 hours.

Runaway Locomotive Smashes Into Paris Train; 54 Injured

Paris Sept. 2 (AP).—A wildly careening runaway railway locomotive, pursued afoot by its crew, smashed into a crowded suburban train in the busy East Station today, injuring 54 persons.

The engineer and fireman were eating lunch on the grass beside the siding, where they had left the engine at Levaillette, several miles from Paris. Suddenly, to their horror, they saw the engine begin backing, gain speed and start an unchecked run for Paris.

The two men started in chase, but the engine outdistanced them, increasing its speed to what was estimated later as 30 miles an hour. It roared across a bridge leading to the station while a bewildered switchman excitedly blew his whistle, not knowing no one was aboard.

It pounded through the yards as railroad men shouted at it and smashed into the standing suburban train, made up of old-fashioned double-decked wooden coaches.

The engineer of a neighboring train leaped into the cab of the runaway and closed the throttle.

Most of the injured were able to leave hospitals after treatment. The runaway's engineer, called in for questioning, insisted that the brakes had been set before he got out to eat and that some one must have climbed aboard and opened the throttle accidentally.

No Americans were listed among the casualties.

Senators Call Firms Linked To Zaharoff In Arms Quiz

Submarine Builders Are Ordered to Appear Tomorrow.

"Most Revealing" Probe Promised

Nye Is Directing Quest for 'Profit Motive' of Trade in War.

By Robert C. Albright.

Officials of the Electric Boat Co., manufacturers of submarines for the United States Navy, and reputedly linked with Sir Basil Zaharoff through correspondence with the international arms salesman, were summoned yesterday to appear before the Senate Munitions Investigating Committee at hearings opening tomorrow.

Three American armament manufacturers were named in a preliminary schedule of witnesses made public by Senator Gerald P. Nye, North Dakota independent Republican, directing the Senate's first investigation of the munitions trade, in quest of a "profit motive" for war.

As Chairman Nye launches what he calls the "most revealing" inquiry ever undertaken by the Senate, Henry R. Carse, president of the Electric Boat Co., will take the stand. He will be followed Wednesday by L. Y. Cpear, vice president of the company, and Sterling J. Joyner, company representative.

Other Firms Listed.

Other firms called before the bar of the committee this week are:

The American Armament Corporation, represented by A. J. Miranda, jr., president; F. H. Sweetser, secretary, and Maj. H. M. Brayton, technical director, subpenaed for Friday.

Laying the groundwork for an extensive excursion behind the curtains of war, hearings opening tomorrow will continue for three weeks, to be followed by further hearings later this fall.

"To Sample the Data."

"It is the intention of the committee to lay a background for future work in these first hearings, and to sample the data secured so far," said Robert Wohlforth, assistant to the chief investigator.

"It is intended that many of the witnesses heard at this time will be recalled for later testimony.

"The committee has no preconceived opinions of what the evidence will develop nor any beliefs as to what constructive results will ensue."

There's No Honor In a Robber, Cries Woman to Police

Chicago, Sept. 2 (AP).—Robbers, Mrs. Leslie Marsdon of DeKalb, Ill., has learned, are not to be trusted.

She came to the police today and said:

"I was driving my car west of St. Charles when two men stopped me and took the machine. They said they wanted it for a few hours and then I would find it on the outskirts of Chicago, on Ogden avenue. Well, I've covered the district and the car's not there. The men broke their word."

Relief Cost Passes 3 Billions; Needy Army Near All-Time High

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

Chicago, Sept. 2.—The depression has cost the United States in relief for the unemployed and destitute the staggering sum of more than $3,000,000,000, a survey revealed today.

Private charities swept into action a few months after the disastrous stock crash in October, 1929, municipal and county units followed shortly, the Federal Government spent the first of its many millions early in 1931. Since then State treasuries also have been taxed to capacity caring for the needy.

While the Federal Government has been the biggest single contributor, State and local units have shared heavily.

The Nation's relief bill from January 1, 1933, to June, 1934, as financed by Federal, State and local governments was estimated last week by Corrington Gill, assistant Federal emergency relief administrator, as approximately $1,340,000,000.

This did not include the $400,000,000 allotted to last winter's CWA, nor figures in any of the three long previous years of depression.

The Federal Government first became an active relief participant when President Hoover's farm board turned over $73,000,000 of sur-

5,000,000 Families Will Need Aid This Winter, Richberg Says.

(Associated Press)

A forecast that Federal relief rolls will reach a record high of 5,000,000 families in February, and a denial of "misinformation" that the Government is financing strikes were issued yesterday by Donald Richberg for the President's executive council.

The prediction of future needy was in the third council report on "New Deal" progress. That was accompanied by a statement in which the council secretary said:

"The amount of Federal relief payments which can be attributed to strikes has been almost negligible."

Should relief rolls be increased to 5,000,000 families they would constitute the heaviest load since Mr. Roosevelt took office. The largest previous relief burden, Richberg's figures showed, was in March, 1933, when 4,560,000 families received Federal aid. In June, 1934, a total of 3,716,755 families and 512,701 single persons were on relief.

'Lower Shore' Whets Its Ax For Ritchie

Four Counties Still Nurse Old Grudge; Conley Gains Strength.

This is the first of a series of articles on the Maryland political situation, preliminary to the primary election of September 12, by Mr. Waltman, who is now making a tour of the Maryland counties and Baltimore.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Salisbury, Md., Sept. 2.—Crossing the Choptank River, coming down the Eastern Shore of Maryland, a land which might be called anti-Ritchie territory is reached. In the four lower Eastern Shore counties, Gov. Albert C. Ritchie is, and for the last 14 years has been, unpopular.

In this respect the "lower shore" differs from many other parts of Maryland. Irrespective of the feeling in other parts of the State, Gov. Ritchie at some time or another has been a hero to the people in all other areas even in rock-ribbed Republican Allegany County, which he twice has carried in general elections.

But the "lower shore" has been constant in its dislike of Gov. Kitchie. First it was because the Governor was a wet, and this section professed great fealty to prohibtion. Secondly, the Governor was a Baltimorean, his best friends were in the smart set of Baltimore, and that group, including the satirical Henry L. Mencken, has always scoffed at the Eastern Shore and its people.

Lynching Action Fed Fury.

The most recent reason for hostility toward Gov. Ritchie in this section was his handling of the lynching at Princess Anne, in Somerset County, last October. The Governor on that occasion sent a company of the historic Fifth Regiment down here to arrest a group which the State attorney general contended participated in the lynch-

Caffrey Denies He Favored Cuba Bull Ring Return

Havana, Sept. 2 (AP).—United States Ambassador Jefferson Caffery is having bullfight trouble. A few weeks ago Sydney Franklin, Brooklyn bullfighters, who made an international reputation in Spain, visited the Ambassador. He is still hearing about it.

During their conversation Mr. Caffrey remarked he had seen many bullfights. The remark got into the newspapers. It grew and grew. Within a few days it had reached the United States.

That started it. A number of organizations registered protests with the State Department at Washington. The number of complaints increased. They came direct to the Ambassador. He had to take time out from his work to answer them, finally publishing a statement:

"Regarding reports published in the United States that I made a statement favoring the resumption of bullfighting in Cuba, I want to declare emphatically that I made no such statement."

Kidnaper Gang Off to Alcatraz

Kelly, Bailey, Bates Among 100 Rushed to Coast From U. S. Prison.

Leavenworth, Kans., Sept. 2 (AP). A heavily armored train of six coaches left the Leavenworth Penitentiary secretly today for the West. It was reported headed for Alcatraz Prison in San Francisco Bay, and to be carrying among its 100 prisoners a trio of kidnapers—George (Machine Gun) Kelly, Albert Bates and Harvey Bailey.

Prison authorities and officials at Washington declined comment, but it was learned from other sources that Kelly, Bates and Bailey were aboard. It was reported that the trio might be taken off the train somewhere along the line for speedier transportation, perhaps by airplane, to the Pacific Coast.

The work of placing the prisoners on the train was accomplished so smoothly that the train had departed before the transfer became known. The prisoners were chained in groups placed aboard. Guards were stationed in the cars in such a position that their machine guns could be directed to all points.

Nazis Seek U. S. Loans, London Paper Reports

London, Sept. 2 (Jewish Telegraphic Agency)—Nazi government officials have opened negotiations in New York with an Anglo-American syndicate for the extension of credits to Germany, the London Sunday Chronicle reported today.

Chancellor of the Exchequer Neville Chamberlain would never permit the granting of such loans to Germany, the Chronicle declared.

30,000 Swarm To Capital for Labor Holiday

Record Throng Expected to See Parade of 10,000 Today.

Tourists were swarming to the Capital yesterday in numbers that presaged one of the largest Labor Day throngs in the city's history today.

Approximately 30,000 came over the week-end from every section of the Nation by bus, rail and motor. Several bus lines reported the heaviest incoming traffic on record. All railroads were running holiday excursions, and long trains were arriving hourly with near-capacity loads.

Bus line officials estimated arrivals at 18,000. Another 8,000 reached the Capital by rail, and at Washington Tourist Camp in East Potomac Park 1,200 found accommodations, compelling hundreds to seek lodging elsewhere.

Several downtown hotels were filled to capacity, and at others tourists were arriving in numbers exceeding anything since the cherry blossom festival last spring.

Thousands on Outings.

Meanwhile thousands of Government workers, taking advantage of the three-day holiday, had left the city for outings at the seashore or the mountains, jamming highways and swelling incoming throngs at bus and rail stations. Government offices and business houses will remain closed today, with the Library of Congress, which will be open from 2 to 10 p. m., excepted.

Ideal holiday weather was in store for tourist and Capital sojourners, the Weather Bureau forecasting continued fair skies and temperatures moderately cool. Yesterday's temperatures ranged from the high sixties to the low seventies.

Labor, with its forces augmented by fraternal, and municipal patriotic groups, military units and members of the fire department, will march 10,000 strong, providing the leading attraction of the day. Stands have been put up along the line of march from Peace Monument up along Pennsylvania avenue to Fifteenth street, south to Con-

Body of 'Chute Jumper Recovered From Marsh

Scarboro, Me., Sept. 2 (AP).—Frederick Dunn, of Gardner, Miss., plunged to his death today as his parachute failed to open after he had bailed out from his disabled plane from a height of about 1,500 feet at an air meet at the Portland Airport.

As more than 1,000 spectators looked on, his body and the plane plummeted into the marshes which surround the airport. Dunn's body was not found until an hour after the crash.

Mills Arming 'Scabs' to War On Strikers, Unions Claim

Yarn, Velvet, Drapery Industries Subject to Call.

Pinchot Will Use Troops if Needed

Only Conceded Rights Will End Walkout, Gorman Declares.

Impetus was given to the momentous Nation-wide textile strike yesterday when union officials predicted extension of the tie-up to 150,000 workers in allied industries within a week.

The additional hordes, employed in underwear, synthetic yarn, velvet, drapery and upholstery mills, would reinforce 1,000,000 wage earners in cotton, silk, woolen and worsted plants claimed by unionists to have been subject to the strike orders which became effective Saturday night.

Peace negotiations, conducted for days without success by the National Labor Relations Board, remained at a virtual standstill, with no conferences scheduled between the opposing forces.

Most of the mills will close today in observance of Labor Day. Tomorrow will be a red-letter day as several thousand plants meet the challenge of the union by seeking to reopen. Claims of the employers that most of their workers plan to ignore the strike orders will be put to the acid test.

Hints of impending violence marked the scores of telegrams pledging support received yesterday at Washington headquarters of the United Textile Workers. Typical was a message from a local in Augusta, Ga., reading:

"Scabs being armed in Horse Creek Valley."

Prepared for Communists.

Reports of widespread Communist activity among the strikers drew sharp criticism from Francis J. Gorman, strike committee chairman.

"Communists are starting dirty work like they always do," he commented. "They are promoting their false philosophy, but we won't tolerate them. We're better prepared to check them then ever before."

Organizers will whip the enthusiasm of workers to fever pitch in speeches today at mass meetings on village squares, city commons and other public places from Maine to Alabama. Pickets will march at every mill which seeks to operate.

"This will be the most momentous Labor Day in history," Gorman prophesied. "The entire textile industry will be 90 per cent crippled by Wednesday."

The strike chairman voiced confidence that the participants would be fed "no matter how long they remain out." He pointed out the walkout was approved by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and revealed he anticipated financial assistance from several international unions affiliated with the A. F. of L. No definite word has been received from the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, he said, concerning whether it would help needy strikers.

An earlier telegram from Gorman to all Governors in more than a

1,000 Comb Wilds For Lost Warden

Idaho Deputy Missing in Hunt for Poachers.

Wallace, Idaho, Sept. 2 (AP).—The greatest search the Coeur d' Alene District has ever known was on today as 1,000 men combed the rugged wilderness for E. A. Teed, deputy game warden, missing since Tuesday.

Scores of parties searched the country southeast of Mullan, Teed's home town, seeking the deputy who disappeared while investigating a report of unlawful killing of deer. Few held any hope of finding the missing man alive.

The net result of nearly a week of search by airplane, bloodhounds and possemen included the discovery of Teed's car, abandoned at the head of Boulder Gulch, and the finding not far distant of a handkerchief on which was initialed the letter "E."

Ten Crack Bombers To Span U. S. in 'War'

Alaska Squadron Ordered to Reinforce G. H. Q. Air Force in East; "Enemy" Outnumbers Two Armies; Attack Slated Today.

By Harris B. Hull.

General headquarters, American Army, Raritan Arsenal, N. J., Sept. 2.—Orders for immediate aerial reinforcements, necessitating a transcontinental flight of the ten giant Alaskan bombers, today turned the somewhat colorless and theoretical war maneuvers into a dramatic and vital test of men and machines.

The surprise order, issued by Gen. Douglas MacArthur, from offices of the high command here, is expected to result in the huge twin-engined bombers taking off early tomorrow from Rockwell Field, Calif. Officers here felt that Lieut. Col. Henry Arnold, flight commander, would attempt the crossing in a single day.

The planes, pilots and men are the same ones that returned to Washington August 20 from a flight to Fairbanks, Alaska, and return. In addition to Col. Arnold, the leading officers will be Majs. Ralph Royce and Hugh Knerr.

"Seriousness of the tactical situation and need for additional planes" was the reason advanced by general staff officers here at headquarters tonight for the orders that will start the tall, silvery-haired Arnold on his third trip to the east in six weeks.

But behind the orders dispatched the mock warfare is a more important reason for the move which will inject the most interesting spark of life yet developed in the New Jersey maneuvers.

Here at headquarters tonight officers are engaged in computing the time that would be required to move the Infantry, Cavalry, Artillery and other units from their home stations into the battle area. These computations must be accurate.

Otherwise veteran umpires who know how long it takes to move troops under war conditions will penalize the officers. In order to expedite these figures an elaborate system of mathematical calculations has been established, based to a

Pitcher Tugwell Yanked Out Of Ball Game By Roosevelt

By Leon H. Dure, Jr.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Sept. 2.—Pitcher Rex Tugwell was yanked in the middle of the fourth inning by President Roosevelt here today in a tight ball game, which the Washington "White Hopes" won from Lowell Thomas' "Saints and Sinners," by the score of 26-25.

Contrary to expectations, the foremost "left winger" of the Administration served them up right-handed when he was ordered into the fray in the third inning. Pitching cautiously, he held down the runs to a conservative 7 or 8.

But in the fourth the rugged individuals of the Thomas team solved the New Deal. Singles, doubles and home runs rained about center field, where Harry L. Hopkins, the relief administrator, lay in waiting.

"Take him out, take him out!" insisted the prostrate Mr. Hopkins, weary of shagging flies to all parts of the outfield. And at the suggestion of the President, roaring with laughter, Dr. Tugwell was sent to the showers.

The game was played on the Staatsburg golf course, behind a barn, near the estate of Ogden L. Mills. It represented a return engagement of the White House correspondents, aided by the star "brain trusters," with the Thomas nine of nearby Pawling.

Leaders Offer Plans to Cure Ills of Labor

(Associated Press.)

Not all the celebrators will say that events of the last year have made them happy. And the destructive lightning of the strike—hitting industry right and left for a year now—has shown no signs of diminishing. Only Saturday night workers in the great textile industry were ordered from their tasks in protest against conditions.

The workers are better organized, perhaps, than ever before. They agree the NRA has brought jobs to some unemployed, and more wages and better working conditions to others. But they had hoped that the New Deal would wipe out depression bread lines by the time celebration day rolled around again.

Wary of Red Organizers.

They object, also, to what they call industry's interference with attempts to organize workers. And they are on guard against "Left Wing" Communist agitators who are gathering a following with their claims the American Federation of Labor is not sufficiently militant in obtaining labor's needs. An element within the Federation sees weakness in the long-standing system of unions by trades and wants instead to band together all the workers in each industry.

Rumblings of dissatisfaction with the speed of the Federal boards set up by President Roosevelt to settle disputes in the auto and steel industries have been heard.

Yet the Roosevelt Administration is optimistic on labor's future.

"Progress has been made toward recovery since this day a year ago and the steps being taken toward bringing about a better economic arrangement which will not lead again to disaster should hearten every wage earner in the country," said Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, in her Labor Day message.

"President Roosevelt's Committee on Economic Security is now functioning. It will suggest a comprehensive program designed to afford protection to the individual in all hazards likely to involve him in distress and dependency."

Green Urges Wage Boost.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, suggested two means of attaining New Deal aims, in his message to organized labor:

"To increase the amount of National income going into wages and small salaries so as to maintain a balance between production and consumption that will use products and services for higher standards of living; and legal and economic institutions that recognize and protect the interests of producing workers equally with the interests of the owners of these products and other property."

John Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, flatly told industry in his holiday message that it must adopt a 30-hour week to save itself.

Reduction of hours, he said, must come "even if it involves readjustment of market realizations."

Lewis, head of the largest industrial union in the country, also told labor that "the time has come when the employes in mass industries must be permitted and encouraged to organize themselves into industrial unions," and that the American Federation of Labor must authorize such a policy."

Unrest Laid to Better Times.

President Roosevelt's signature on the recovery act of 1933 was scarcely dry when the present wave of unrest started. Its origin has been widely laid to better times in industry combined with labor's first direct guarantee of its right to bargain collectively, written in the much-discussed section 7 (a) of the recovery act.

That strikes increase as times get better just as they decrease in times of depression is an axiom with labor men. Factory gates, closed for months, swung open when industry realized it might make a handsome profit last spring by extensive output before production costs inevitably mounted. After a few weeks of satisfaction at just having a job, workingmen sought to recoup the wages they lost in the idle months of depression—and wage strikes started.

The employes' new guaranteed right to "organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing," however, has been responsible for most of the industrial strife of the last 14 months.

Strong Northeast Blow Due to Hit Virginia.

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 2 (Spl.).—Northeast storm warnings displayed along the coast from Hatteras to Delaware Breakwater drove a number of vessels into Hampton Roads today and prevented the sailing of others bound for New York and points on the New England Coast.

The storm was expected to extend from Hatteras to Atlantic City and according to J. J. Murphy, expert meteorologist here, would cause strong northeast winds along the coast during the next 36 hours.

The hoisting of storm warnings threw a scare into residents of Willoughby and Chesapeake Beach and many moved into Norfolk for the night. Murphy said the storm would not do any considerable damage along the coast but advised precautionary measures as a protection to exposed beach property. The storm at last reports was off Hatteras where the wind attained velocity of 40 miles from the northeast. At Cape Henry only 30 miles was recorded, but a higher velocity was expected before morning.

$41,000,000 Weekly Wage Boost Claimed By Perkins

Employment Is 10 Pct. Higher Than in 1933, Says Secretary.

By Frances Perkins (Secretary of Labor).

We can observe this Labor Day, the forty-seventh anniversary of the holiday, with some satisfaction in the improvement of our economic conditions in the past year.

Nearly 2,000,000 men and women, who were jobless a year ago today, have had work in private industry within the year and approximately 3,000,000 who were out of work when the depression was at its worst have had jobs in factories, mines, stores and in other private enterprises since then.

While there have been some recessions in recent months, due partly to seasonal factors, employment is 10 per cent higher and pay rolls 16 per cent higher than at this time in 1933. As against the low point of the depression, reached in March, 1933, private employment is 34 per cent higher and pay rolls 63 per cent greater.

$41,000,000 Pay Rise Noted.

Pay roll disbursements to workers in private industry are approximately $41,000,000 a week greater than a year ago today, and $72,800,000 higher weekly than when the economic situation was most acute.

In addition to these gains in private industry in employment and pay rolls, public works construction projects are now employing directly 625,000 workers who are being paid over $32,000,000 monthly; 380,000 Civilian Conservation Workers are drawing some $15,000,000 a month; 19,000 Reconstruction Finance Corporation project workers are receiving $1,600,000 in monthly pay rolls, and 214,000 persons are engaged on State road work for which they are being paid more than $11,250,000 per month.

These improved conditions are reflected in an increase of over $3,000,000,000 in the Republic's bank deposits, of greater earnings by corporations, and of increased tax collections which are helping to bring the Nation's municipalities out of red ink.

From all sections of the country have come reports of a greatly improved outlook for city financial affairs. Furthermore, the total income of farmers, it is now estimated, will be some $1,000,000,000 greater this year than in 1933, Purchasing Power Increased.

All these show concretely how purchasing power has been increased, enabling our people to buy more of the products of our mass production system for their comfort and well-being.

As a nation we are recognizing that programs long thought of as merely labor welfare, such as shorter hours, higher wages, and a voice in the terms and conditions of work, are really essential economic factors for recovery and for the technique of industrial management in a mass production age.

The test of adjusting our industrial life to the patterns of democracy and the needs of a new mechanical period mark both a gain in the standards of life and work for wage earners and also a new responsibility for constructive leadership on the part of labor and management.

Progress has been made toward recovery since this day a year ago, and the steps being taken toward bringing about a better economic arrangement which will not lead again to disaster should hearten every wage earner in the country. President Roosevelt's Committee on Economic Security is now functioning. It will suggest a comprehensive program designed to afford protection to the individual in all hazards likely to involve him in distress and dependency.

Cooperation Is Urged.

Labor Day offers an opportunity for each individual to determine to do his part that recovery may continue at a quickened pace so that we shall again have job and economic security, with the doors of opportunity open to all those willing and able to work.

The responsibility of wage earners is increasingly greater as the laws and agencies dealing with industrial and labor matters rely more and more upon cooperation of labor for the effective development in the interest of wage earners, business and the public.

This new challenge for labor statesmanship is everywhere meeting with response from American wage earners. The people of the country have reason to be glad that ability, integrity and patriotic devotion have been marked in this period.

drove over to coach things from the side line. He shouted advice, in the manner of all ball fans, when Tugwell and Hopkins slammed out what they hoped were homers but which, alas, were caught by the third baseman.

All were agreed that both played bang-up games while they lasted. Outside of a few muffed flies and the time he stopped to tie his shoe lace with runners speeding around the bases, Hopkins was the best center fielder on the nine. And Dr. Tugwell looked at least the part of a great pitcher.

Mr. Thomas, author and radio commentator, captained the Pawling team from first base. Other star players included K. C. ("Casey") Hogate, president of the Wall Street Journal, and Prosper Burnelli, who invented the crossword puzzle but much prefers to catch.

Among several score spectators who surrounded the President's automobile were Judge Fred Kernochan, of New York City, a yachting companion, and Oscar Chapman, Assistant Secretary of Interior. Chapman, with Tugwell and Hopkins, is the guest of Mr. Roosevelt over the week-end.

In this manner, the President passed most of the afternoon, banishing the cares of office. During the morning he attended services at St. James Episcopal Church, of which he is senior warden, accompanied by Mrs. Sarah Delano Roosevelt, his mother, and Dr. Tugwell.

Mr. Roosevelt still refrained from comment on the textile strike, but it was known that he is keeping in close touch with the situation at Washington. Other problems he discussed in leisurely fashion with Tugwell, Hopkins and Chapman, who are to return to the Capital tomorrow.

Gascoigne, whose true name was Henry Smith, was born in Australia and has a wife and daughter in New York.

Richberg Says Winter Relief Will Set Record

5,000,000 Families Will Need Federal Aid, He Predicts.

With strike clouds now breaking over almost a million textile workers, Richberg said that in view of "a certain amount of misinformation," he felt he should make a clarifying statement. So he said:

"The number of workers involved in strikes during the last year has been a very small percentage of the total number of employed workers; and has been a smaller percentage than in previous comparable periods. The total man-hours lost as a result of strikes has been likewise unusually small; that is, strikes have been of exceptionally short duration."

Richberg expressed confidence that a "very marked improvement has been made, both in working conditions generally and in the handling of labor relations."

Federal Work Praised.

The effect of administration of the recovery act, with activities of the other Government departments and agencies, "including particularly the Department of Labor and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration," said the statement, "has been to reduce the extent and severity of labor controversies, which, according to all precedents, rise rapidly during a period of economic recovery."

In the first two sections of his progress report, Richberg said more than 4,000,000 workers had gone back to their jobs under the "New Deal," and that the goal of parity for farm prices was almost accomplished.

In "relief of destitution"—the third report—the council secretary traced the history of Federal relief since March, 1933, including the three major programs of direct relief, civil works, and the emergency work program.

Rise in Relief Payments.

The report showed that with the development of the general program, relief payments increased from an average per family of $16 a month in May last year to a present average of $23. This upward trend in cost was attributed partially to price increases, "retail food prices having increased more than 20 per cent since the low point in April, 1933, with further increases expected during the coming months."

The principal cause of the rise in family relief costs, however, Richberg said, was "the policy in connection with work programs of allowing the larger budgets which under such circumstances are necessary for food, clothing and car fare. Also relief standards have been raised in certain areas, particularly in the South, where the average is still extremely low."

It was set forth that 4,560,000 families were receiving relief in March, 1933, when Mr. Roosevelt took office, and that more than 4,200,000 families were on the rolls when FERA succeeded the RFC in the relief field in May, last year. The RFC loaned $300,000,000 to States and localities for relief.

Reached Peak in May.

The cost of relief in March, 1933, was given as $81,205,000. The relief expenditures reached their peak in May, this year, at $128,020,426, on the basis of figures to July 1, 1934.

"Through increase in private employment, only in part attributed to seasonal causes," said the report, "the relief rolls declined steadily from March, 1933, to the end of September, then rose, and then dropped abruptly toward the end of the year through transfers from relief rolls to the CWA program."

With the termination of CWA the relief rolls increased sharply, with the result that 16,825,975 persons were receiving aid in April. The persistence of drought conditions was given as the cause of increased relief demands in areas where a decrease was expected during the summer.

Many in Drought States.

"This," said Richberg, "coupled with an unfavorable trend during the latter part of the period (April to July) in private industrial employment, has held up the relief load which in the previous corresponding period, April to July, 1933, declined about 23 per cent."

It was estimated 4,200,000 cases were receiving relief in July this year, with more than one-third employed on work projects. About 1,000,000 cases were located in 18 drought States.

The report also reviewed the relief effects of rural rehabilitation, agricultural demonstrations, recreational projects, the emergency education program, transient relief, surplus relief, research activities, emergency conservation and the various departments, including War, Navy, Commerce, Agriculture and Labor.

"It is worthy of comment," Richberg said, "that an average of 10,000 men are leaving the CCC camps each month to accept employment."

Textile Mills Arming 'Scabs,' Unions Claim

Pinchot Says He Will Call Out Troops, in Case of Violence.

score of textile States brought response from Gov. Gifford Pinchot of Pennsylvania. Concerning Gorman's veiled assurances that no troops would be needed to maintain order, Pinchot wired:

"The only time I have called out the Pennsylvania National Guard for strike duty was to protect Pennsylvania miners from attacks by company deputy sheriffs.

"I shall use the full force of my office now as in the past to prevent violence to or against all Pennsylvania citizens, whether strikers or not."

Gorman Distrusts Boards.

Gorman was lukewarm over indications that the labor board might name a neutral committee to seek a settlement.

"We heartily approve of any legitimate attempt to arbitrate the strike," he said, "but our people are sick and tired of boards. They have no confidence in them.

"In the past when we protested about conditions in the mills the Government gave us a board. After the board got through our conditions were worse than they were before."

In any event, Gorman warned, the union will be satisfied with nothing short of "real concessions."

Speaking over a National radio hook-up, Gorman predicted nonunionists would join in the strike and charged the manufacturers with "gouging" the consumer.

"If the average American consumer could know how he has been 'chiseled' by the cotton textile industry," he protested, "he would carry the banner in a strike procession himself.

"No one knows or will ever know the full story of this gouging. * * * For 100 years the general public and more particularly the textile workers have been free game for the textile barons.

"They will not submit to being game any longer. The workers are on strike to enforce decent treatment, to end intolerant abuses, to vindicate the law which guarantees them the right of collective bargaining."

Charging the average wage in the industry was $10 a week, Gorman added:

"I wonder if all of you realize how much depends on wages. Let me tell you this: Life itself depends on wages and especially the lives of babies. Several years ago the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor made a careful study of child mortality and they uncovered a terrifying fact.

"Striking for Lives of Babies."

"They found that the life chances of a new-born baby depend to a large degree on his father's income. High wages mean low infant death rates; low wages mean high infant death rates. * * *

"You textile workers are striking for babies' lives and don't let your neighbors forget it. And every piece of wage chiselling means an increase in the number of little coffins coming into a mill town. Don't forget that either."

Investors, Gorman contended, have fared disgracefully at the hands of the textile manufacturers.

"The cotton textile industry," he said, "has 'chiselled' the investor and the consumer almost as much as it has chiselled its workers.

"One of the best indications of this is the way the stock of textile corporations has been watered by stock dividends. Some of these stocks have been drenched so thoroughly that the job of turning water into wine would be as easy as turning these so-called 'securities' back to their real value.

"For example, the Bibb Manufacturing Co. — and you know all about that—issued six stock dividends in 11 years. Two of them were 100 per cent; that is to say the stock outstanding before this particular dividend was doubled.

"It makes you dizzy to figure the thing out, but it comes to this: the outstanding stock of that textile company has been multiplied about 16-fold. The man who held 100 shares of stock at the beginning of that process would hold 1,600 shares at the end of it.

"And bear in mind that every increase in stock issues puts added pressure on the management to hold down wages and drive workers by the stretch-out system to the highest est possible production in order to pay dividends on this watered stock."

Two Dionne Triplets Doing Well, Lose Weight

Callander, Ontario, Sept. 2 (AP).—Two of the Dionne quintuplets lost weight today, but their physician Dr. A. R. Dafoe, reported them "all doing well."

Emilie, second lightest of the five girls, lost ¼ ounce to drop to 5 pounds 3¼ ounces. Annette lost ¾ ounce to go down to 7 pounds ¾ ounces.

Fog Downs Girl Fliers In 3d Endurance Try

Chicago, Sept. 2 (AP).—The third time was no charm for Jean Larene and Mary Elizabeth Owens.

The two Texas girl fliers were forced to descend on their third attempt to gain the woman's title for endurance flying because of a pea soup fog that settled over the Chicago area. The pair went up yesterday at 10:44 a. m. (Central standard time) and came down at 6:09 a. m. today.

Relief Cost Past 3 Billion, Nation-Wide Survey Shows

plus wheat and cotton to the Red Cross in March, 1931.

In July, 1932, Congress provided $300,000,000 for relief loans to State and local governments. Only $1,442,543 had been repaid to August 13, 1934, and Congress is considered likely to waive remaining repayments next year.

The sum of $1,231,000,000 has been appropriated to the Relief Administration since it was created in May, 1933. Grants from it have totaled $1,100,000,000. The balance will be exhausted by the middle of this month and additional sums then must come from the President's discretionary fund.

CCC and FERA Funds.

Funds obligated to the emergency FERA figures show State and local conservation work (CCC) up to August 1, 1934, total $416,653,000. bond issue authorizatoins for unemployment relief to date approximate $300,000,000.

In the early years of the depression, said Gill, private contributions met 30 to 40 per cent of the relief expenditures, but now they are paying less than 5 per cent. "Thus meeting the need for unemployment relief has beeome almost exclusively a public responsibility," he said.

Harry L. Hopkins, relief administrator, last week fixed the number of persons now on relief roles at approximately 16,000,000, about the same number, he said, as were being helped this time last year.

Local political subdivisions—counties, townshops, cities—contributed 33 per cent of relief costs in January, February and March, 1933. The percentage since has been reduced steadily by diminishing ability to pay, such as contributions from April, 1934, through June, 1934, being only 14 per cent of the total.

State Contributions.

State contributions increased from 10 per cent in the first quarter of 1933 to 33 per cent in the same period of 1934. Estimated State and local funds available for the remainder of the year are $30,000,000 monthly.

State and local units, and private charities, the survey showed, contributed more than a quarter of a billion dollars for relief of the unemployed and needy since the start of the depression.

Figures were not available from several of the largest States, including Pennsylvania, whose State relief payments have been in the millions. Others from which figures were not available, included Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Delaware, North Dakota, Florida, Mississippi, New Mexico, Oregon, West Virginia and Connecticut. Sums expended by private charities were available for Kansas only. In most States no records were at hand of county and township expenditures.

Cumberland Labor Untouched by Strife

Walkout of Textile Mill Workers Unlikely.

Cumberland, Md., Sept. 2 (Spl.).—There is speculation here as to what the effect of the textile strike might be on local industries, especially the plant of the Celanese Corporation of America, but the impression is that a sympathetic strike is far in the offing.

The celanese plant makes artificial silk and its 6,000 workers are not organized. They reside in largely scattered areas, some as far as 25 miles away. The Celanese Athletic Association, composed of 5,000 employes, has tended to promote good will and harmony. The plant has had no labor trouble and attempts to organize the employes have been unsuccessful.

This was the first industry in this territory to comply with the NRA and the action resulted in taking on a large number of additional employes.

Circulars have been distributed at the plant urging a sympathetic strike should rayon workers be called out in connection with the textile strike, William A. Miller, president of Allegany Trades Council, stated.

Russ Columbo Dies Of Hollywood Shot

"I called my mother and father (who were in another room) immediately and my father called the police.

"I have had this collection of pistols for seven years. I bought them at an antique store. I have always kept them on top of my desk here.

"I had never made an examination of the guns to see whether they were loaded because they were so old. I had no idea at all they were loaded."

Brown, after being questioned by the officers, was not held.

Columbo, christened Ruggiero Columbo, was born in San Francisco, the youngest of 12 children. He received his grammar school education there and later attended high school in Hollywood.

Eager for a career as a musician, he left school and toured the country as a concert violinist. He studied under Alexander Bevani, noted operatic coach, and was featured as a singer with an orchestra at a hotel here. This was the beginning of a career which led him to radio and screen fame.

For a year Columbo toured as a singer with Gus Arnheim's orchestra and then organized one of his own, which led him to success in National broadcasts. He returned here about a year ago to take up motion picture work. He appeared in a numbber of films and recently finished his first starring vehicle.

Havana, Sept. 2 (AP).—Students and leftists of various degrees of radicalism wrote another chapter in the Sanchez-Fernandez case today when they paraded the streets under a broiling sun to bury the bodies of the two in Colon Cemetery, but there was no indication that the burial closed the book.

Hanging over the government, which has been harassed by bombs, revolutionary plots and strikes, was the threat of another strike by five government departments, the schools and possibly busmen and street car men—all in protest of the killing of Rudolfo Sanchez and Ivo Fernandez, two students, early yesterday.

Their case rapidly was becoming as important in Cuba as that of Sacco and Vanzetti was in the United States.

Youth Is Missing.

Closely linked with the situation was the mysterious disappearance of Enrique Suarez Jiminez, another youth, who has been missing from his home ever since friends of Sanchez and Fernandez accused him of furnishing police with information that led to their arrest and subsequent killing following a political disturbance.

Reliable sources revealed that Suarez Jiminez was last seen last night inside a building of the University of Havana, where students yesterday held a demonstration. It was said he was beaten by the slain pair's friends and later "tried" by an unauthorized group of them.

Meanwhile the danger of a conflict on the waterfront appeared after Alejandro Buttari, port captain, announced that, starting tomorrow, he would enforce the commission's ruling that old striking dockworkers be placed on the active list. There was strong talk that the present employes, hired to take the places of the strikers, would oppose the move.

Phone Workers Involved.

Across the city, at the telephone company, 256 leaders of February's strike notified the government they were going to force their way back to work tomorrow. The company's refusal to reemploy them in accordance with a recent cabinet decree caused the government to take over the company.

Delegates representing government employes of the departments of communications, labor, public works, treasury and agriculture and student leaders voted a 24-hour strike to begin Monday morning.

Party Set-Ups Face Shake-Up, Sinclair Says

Complete Realignment of Major Political Units Is Predicted.

Chicago, Sept. 2 (AP).—Major political parties of the United States are in a process of complete realignment, Upton Sinclair, Democratic nominee for Governor of California, asserted today.

Sinclair, whose spectacular primary victory focused National attention upon California's party set-up, stopped in Chicago today on his way to Hyde Park, N. Y., to pay a "courtesy call" on President Roosevelt.

His own success in the primary is an indication of the political trend, said Sinclair, militant liberal. Reactionary and conservative elements of both Democratic and Republican parties are solidifying, not only against his California program but also against the New Deal, he asserted.

"Tired of Starving."

"People in California are tired of starving," Sinclair said. "My victory represents the will of the people for a change.

"I have dropped schemes of utopias and cooperative commonwealths. This is an emergency and must be met practically. The plan of E. P. I. C., which stands for 'End Poverty in California,' is a simple program to put the unemployed to productive work, make them self-supporting, and take them off the taxpayers' back."

Sinclair said that in his call Tuesday on President Roosevelt he does not intend to seek support of National leaders for his autumn campaign. He also will confer, however, with Postmaster General James A. Farley, and Harry L. Hopkins, Federal Relief Administrator, in Washington after his trip to Hyde Park.

Turned Down $1,000,000.

"Expenses of our primary campaign were paid entirely by the people. We turned down offers of more than $1,000,000 in campaign contributions because they were offered with 'strings,'" he said. "The fall campaign will be conducted along the same lines."

Sinclair praised the Rooseveltian "New Deal" saying it was a step "in the right direction, but was only the beginning."

The AAA drew criticism from the veteran writer and pamphleteer. He termed crop reduction "an economic blunder and suicide," and said any limiting of production, while people are starving, was fundamentally unsound.

The provisions of EPIC will be written into the Democratic State platform when the State convention convenes this month, he said.

Should the Sinclair forces fail to control the Legislature, Sinclair stated that EPIC measures would be presented to the people by means of the initiative and referendum, if he is elected Governor.

Warns of Fascist State.

"If Frank Merriam, the Republican nominee, is elected Governor of California, a Fascist State will be created that will put even Huey Long to shame," Sinclair asserted, stating that the newly formed Liberty League, whose membership includes Alfred E. Smith and John W. Davis, is purely Fascist.

His November ballot will be the first one cast on a Democratic ticket, Sinclair said. He always has voted the Socialist ticket and was formerly a member of the Socialist party.

"The Socialist party is apparently disintegrating," Sinclair continued. "It could never be a success in the United States because the Socialist appeal is primarily to the working class, while in America the middle class is the largest class. Doctrines of the Socialist party were primarily of European origin and could never fit the American scene."

Sinclair spent some time chatting with Mayor Fiorella LaGuardia of New York, who will deliver a Labor Day address at A Century of Progress. Sinclair spoke at the fair today and then resumed his journey to Hyde Park.

Sinclair Plan Will Fail, Norman Thomas Says

Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 2 (AP).—Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate for President in 1932, today predicted failure of Upton Sinclair's "EPIC" program for abolishing poverty in California.

"Sinclair's nomination for Governor of California is a problem for the Socialist Party in a certain sense," Thomas said. "He is not a Socialist and is not supported by the Socialist Party. There are good and bad elements in his victory. It is encouraging that a State cursed by reaction and industrial feudalism should nominate for Governor a man like Sinclair."

Thomas said he believed Sinclair "sincere, but he has promised the impossible." "And when he fails," Thomas added, "many will say Socialism has been tried and failed. There may be a reaction by some towards Communism or toward Fascism."

Ray That Blinds Fliers at Distance Claimed in Paris

Paris, Sept. 2 (AP).—An anti-aircraft light ray invention capable of blinding fliers at long range, was reported today by the Paris Midi.

The newspaper said the light ray was a 1,000,000-candle power affair, the patent for which has been offered the French government by a German inventor forced to flee from Germany.

The Midi suggested the light beam could protect whole cities from attack by blinding the pilots of bombing planes and declared that an experiment with a 150,000-candle power projector showed it could blind at a distance of 1 mile.

hearing gets under way will be Stephen Raushenbush, chief investigator, who can propound questions in the same incisive manner Ferdinand Pecora interrogated Senate Banking Committee stock market witnesses.

With the exception of Senator Arthur Vandenberg, campaigning for reelection in Michigan, Mr. Carse will appear before a full committee.

In "Treaty Navy" Race.

Always a prominent bidder for Navy construction contracts, the Electric Boat Co. of New York and Groton, Conn., has shared largely already in America's present "treaty Navy" race. Last year the firm contracted to build two submarines for the Navy and later successfully bid for two more.

The first of what may prove a series of interrelations between Sir Basil Zaraoff, Europe's supermerchant of arms, and American armament makers, is expected to be developed when Electric Boat officials take the stand, committee attaches said.

Counsel Raushenbush is expected to plunge almost immediately into international tie-ups of so-called "merchants of death," as he begins his search for the commercial motive Senator Nye believes underlies all wars.

Testimony before many days is expected to turn on present hostilities in the Gran Chaco, where Bolivia and Paraguay are still at odds over disputed territory.

Embargo to Be Proved.

Leads will be thrown out in the course of the hearings to determine how extensively America's embargo on armament shipments to this area has been violated. Senator Nye wants to know if the desire of munitions makers to create a market is in any way responsible for continued hostilities. He wants to know what concerns piled up "vast supplies" prior to the embargo in the hope of getting them into South America.

Although the committee expresses no preconceived notions of what constructive results are aimed at in the inquiry, the committee chairman already has announced a "program" he would like to see attained. It includes a possible Government monopoly in arms, a Federal department of peace, and conscription of property as well as lives in time of war. He would place a ban on any ship flying the American flag while bearing arms to embattled nations.

Committee attaches promise sensational disclosures early in the inquiry. A staff of 80 experts and helpers have been at work since Congress adjourned, examining the books of munitions makers, and tracing down committee leads. Government departments are expected to figure prominently in the first stages of the investigation.

Makers of explosives of all kinds, powders, armor plate and other war metals, small arms, tanks, war chemicals, airplanes and ships, will figure in the evidence laid before the committee.

A record of intrigue extending over a broad international frontier has been promised by those close to the committee.

With but few exceptions, all the hearings will be open to the public, the Senate Office Building's commodious caucus room providing both stage and theater.

Wild Dakota Cows Terrorize Farmer Folk in Missouri

Poplar Bluff, Mo., Sept. 2 (AP).—Butler County farmers have asked Sheriff Lester Massingham to protect their lives and property from the "wild cows of Butler County."

The farmers, headed by A. B. Partenberry, said the cows are wild; that they do not know the purpose of fences, and that the sight of a human being "just burns them up."

The cows were shipped to Arkansas from North Dakota as a part of a Federal project, and wandered into Missouri, the farmers said. Partenberry said farmers in the section were afraid to let their children go out in the woods alone.

Kent Kidnap Trial On Today

40 Ready for Jury Service at Fincastle; Murder Charge Pending.

Fincastle, Va., Sept. 2 (AP).—There was no development during the week-end to indicate there will be any hitch in the opening tomorrow morning of the trial of Maj. Robert C. Kent, jr., on a charge that he kidnaped Mrs. Mary J. Hastings Blue Ridge Springs Hotel last June 24.

Court officials are prepared to take up the case at 9:30 a. m. and Judge A. C. Buchanan, of Tazewell, named by Gov. Peery to preside at the trial after Judge Benjamin Haden, of the local circuit, disqualified himself, was expected to reach here in time.

Forty men have been summoned for jury service. Kent, in Roanoke Jail since a short time after his arrest June 28 at Blue Ridge, is expected to be removed to Fincastle early tomorrow. He also stands indicted in the local court on a charge of murdering Mrs. Hastings.

The woman's body was found June 27 beside a road near Stroudsburg, Pa., with a bullet wound in the head. She had left Blue Ridge with Kent the Sunday previous, telling her employes at the hotel that she would be back Monday or Tuesday. Kent returned Wednesday of that week and said he had last seen Mrs. Hastings in Washington and that he had continued to New York and thence back to Blue Ridge.

Kent vigorously denies any responsibility for the woman's disappearance and maintains that he will be able to present a convincing defense.

Japanese Save American Held In Manchukuo

Gunboat and Planes Rescue Nine From Brigands.

Japanese, were seized after the bandits had wrecked a Chinese Eastern Railway train near Wuchia Thursday night, killing five persons and injuring ten.

A search for them, spurred by the request of United States Consul Walter A. Adams at Tokyo that utmost efforts be made to effect their freedom began at once. Japanese and Manchukuoan airplanes, troops and gunboats cooperated in the three-day search that was climaxed by the sighting of the bandits and their captives early today.

Captives Face Death.

As the chase grew hot, the rescued nine related today, the brigands, realizing that they were trapped on the wooded sandbar, debated whether to kill their captives. They decided, however, that pursuers were too close and that the firing of rifles would reveal their hideout. Then it was decided to attempt to cross the river.

The nine prisoners were saddled with ammunition and baggage and warned they would be slain immediately if they made any outcry while fording the stream.

Notwithstanding this threat, Kumetaro Murakami, Japanese employe of the Manchukuo government, hearing a landing party from the gunboat Konei nearby, shouted "Here we are." The bandits turned their rifles on Murakami, wounding him seriously in the face and arms, but his cries brought the troops and the bandits fled, leaving their captives.

The soldiers followed and fighting continued while the rescued nine were being taken aboard the gunboat. What casualties were inflicted on the brigands was not determined.

That the kidnapers were not without knowledge of modern warfare was indicated by Takeo Fujisawa, Japanese government official, who was among the rescued. "Saturday we were hidden at the bandits' main lair, the island in the Sungari, which was equipped with trenches and dugouts," he related. "The boats the gang periodically used were covered with willow branches, concealing them from airplanes flying overhead."

Clothes Seized by Bandits.

Fujisawa described graphically the 24 hours' march across the rolling country and fields of Kaoliang before reaching the Sungari.

The captives, he said, were barefoot or clad only in tattered clothing given them by the bandits when they seized their prisoners' clothes. They were beaten, he added, when they lagged behind. A day and night of flight, hiding at intervals on islands and in boats along the river, followed, Fujisawa said.

"We frequently heard airplanes, the noise of paddles and the whistle of river boats," he related, "but gagged and huddled at the bottom of the boats as we were, we could not cry out to assist our rescuers.

"Frequently we were threatened with death as the bandits grew fearful that the pursuers were closing in. Sunday morning we reached the sandbar, scene of the rescue, and there the bandits dug pits into which they threw us, still bound, promising death to anyone who cried out. Once the gunboats passed us, and troops aboard shouted to ask whether any Japanese were about.

"The second time the boats passed Murakami could keep silent no longer and called out. The bandits shot him, but the rest of us threw ourselves into the river as the troops landed and we were soon rescued."

considerable extent on war-time experience.

But when an Air Corps unit enters the picture there is no accurate standard of measurement that will tell the commanding generals how long would be required to assemble planes of various types from different points. The airplane is a comparatively new weapon of warfare and during the last few years its performance has been improved greatly.

Tomorrow's flight is designed to supply the high command of the Army with this missing information, with a slide rule that they can apply to the movements of other air forces.

Another reason for the flight is to demonstrate to some few doubting Thomases that exist in and out of the Army the necessity for such an organization as the general headquarters air force under the direct supervision of the commanding general.

Leading tacticians of the general staff feel that much valuable time would be lost if it were necessary for the commanding general of the Army to request air defense from some other branch of the Army or Government department.

In this theoretical situation now existing, the commanding general feels that the threat in the East is greater than any emergency existing in the West. Under the general headquarters air force plan of organization he has been able to issue orders for the immediate movement of a large number of planes which will support the first and second armies. If the decision as to whether or not these plans should be moved rested in a number of officers, it is possible endless debate would follow with the loss of a corresponding amount of important time.

U. S. Troops Preparing Offensive on 'Enemies'

Raritan Arsenal, N. J., Sept. 2 (AP).—A vigorous American offensive against the advancing forces of the Nation's mythical black invaders was ordered today by Gen. Douglas MacArthur, commander in chief of the imaginary American armies deployed along the 100-mile front from the Delaware River to Atlantic highlands.

To the first U. S. Army, commanded by Maj. Gen. Dennis E. Nolan, went orders to launch a limited objective attack on the black South Jersey army tomorrow night to halt the hostile threat at Philadelphia and Wilmington and to regain sufficient ground from the enemy to unloose his main onslaught, an attack on Tuesday all along the South Jersey front.

In this Southern area the phantom black advance had reached the high water mark of the campaign to date with the capture of the strategically important ridge overlooking Camden and Philadelphia, as the troopless, bloodless, and shotless war game maneuvers entered their second phase.

Ridge Is Objective.

The ridge, now held by the blacks, it is believed, will be the objective which Gen. Nolan's troops will try to achieve when they go into action.

Orders to the second American army, facing the enemy on the Sandy Hook to Barnegat Bay front, directed Maj. Gen. Preston Brown, commanding, to continue to delay the advance of hostile hordes threatening metropolitan New York until the incompleted concentration of the second army is finished.

American cavalry, operating in the Browns Mills-Indian Mills area where the Black's North and South armies hold contact, was ordered to interrupt enemy communications in the sector and in the Army airports, theater of the simulated war, imaginary bombers, pursuit, combat and attack planes were being prepared for an imaginary smash at the invaders.

The Blacks still held their numerical superiority as the defenders forged their first counter-offensive thunderbolt. Intelligence reports placed the number of the enemy in the field at 200,000, while the Americans could only muster approximately 183,000. In the air the invaders also held a hypothetical edge with 675 planes against 450 for the defenders.

Pushes Offense Plan.

MacArthur, however, said he believed the time for active offensive operations has arrived. The mythical American troops now in mobilization areas back of the front were expected to swell our forces to 269,573 men or reputedly more than the Blacks have landed to date.

The 269,573 American troops are represented for war game purposes by 450 officers and 600 enlisted men, the units skeletonized in divisions theoretically 13,384 strong consisting of a commanding officer, two staff officers and four enlisted men.

General headquarters (actually located here but theoretically situated at Bethlehem, Pa.) was a beehive of activity as orders and communications poured in by telephone, telegraph and motorcycle dispatch riders for the phantom battle which is being waged largely by communications systems and on paper.

Boat Blast Traps Four in Potomac

Boats were put out and the floundering survivors were taken to shore.

The "Greyhound," meanwhile, ran aground near Shepherd's Landing and burned to the water line. The yacht was a total loss before the fire boat and Harbor police arrived. Its estimated value was $15,000.

Cause of the explosion was not immediately determined. It was believed a leaking gasoline line was responsible. Physicians at Alexandria Hospital said Mrs. Martin and Miss Weakley suffered first and second-degree burns. Martin was slightly burned attempting to reach his trapped wife.

Smith, an attorney with offices in the Southern Building, is a member of the Corinthian Yacht Club. In addition to the loss of his boat, he told police his wallet, containing $187, was swept overboard.

G. O. P. Claims Waste Forced Douglas to Quit

New Deal Repudiation in New England Is Forecast; Democrats Unruffled.

Reviewing the events of the past week, Republican strategists last night saw much to confirm their distrust of the New Deal, while the Democrats, using glasses of a rosier hue, found that the Roosevelt program, like a well-known river, still was "rolling along."

A statement by the Republican Senatorial-Congressional committee declared that the resignation of Lewis W. Douglas as director of the budget was "particularly significant." The statement continued:

"Mr. Douglas, an exponent of sound currency and sane financing, has been in the impossible position of attempting to balance the budget in spite of New Deal extravagances."

Predicts Repudiation.

The strike of textile workers, reports of growing unemployment, the high cost of administering NRA, the election as a Democrat of the erstwhile Socialist, Upton Sinclair—all these developments of the week, the Republican statement declared, presented a dark contrast to the rose-tinted picture held up to the country by the Administration.

Senator Hebert (Republican), Rhode Island, in a statement issued through the campaign committee, predicted that New England voters would repudiate the New Deal at the polls.

He foresaw Republican victories in Maine, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Hampshire and Vermont.

Assailing the Administration's huge expenditures of borrowed money, Hebert said:

"All of this program necessarily makes business, commerce, and industry apprehensive. No one knows what it will bring forth."

Representative Joseph W. Byrns, of Tennessee, chairman of the Democratic National committee, answered Republican critics by saying that, "If it had not been for the G. O. P. there would have been no need for the NRA, the FERA and the CWA."

"Spokesmen for the old, or 'Raw Deal,'" Byrns continued, "are loud in their denunciation of the so-called alphabetical agencies of the Government. They weep over the destruction of little pigs and piously insist that the drought is a manifestation of divine wrath, but all the time the recovery program, like 'Ole Man River,' just keeps rolling along.

"Still Behind Roosevelt."

"Hogs are now selling at well over $8 a hundred, nearly three times what they brought during the closing days of the Hoover regime, cotton brings more than 12 cents a pound, wheat finds ready buyers at better than $1 a bushel and tobacco brings three times as much as it did a year ago."

That the people still are behind President Roosevelt, Byrns said, is shown in the size of the Democratic vote in primary elections all over the country.

This week the attention of politicians will be riveted on three events: The speech of President William Green at the American Federation of Labor convention at Wichita, Kans., a broadcast Friday night by Jouett Shouse, of the American Liberty League, and the visit to Hyde Park tomorrow of Upton Sinclair.

Virginia Splits On Constitution And New Deal

Republican Conservative Will Oppose Roosevelt Democrat.

By C. B. Carr.

Richmond, Sept. 2.—Politics in the Old Dominion so far as the selection of candidates for the November election is concerned took on their final form late yesterday with the nomination by the Republicans of the Sixth Congressional District of a strict "Constitutionalist" to oppose Representative Clifton A. Woodrum, Democrat, strongest of the Virginia "New Dealers."

As the situation now stands, and political observers feel that it is really in its final form, the Democrats are offering their junior United States Senator and nine members of the House of Representatives, while the Republicans have placed in the running a candidate for the Senate and candidates for the House in six of the nine Congressional districts. The only other candidate who, it appears, will receive much attention from the voters in November is an independent candidate for the House of Representatives in the Ninth District and both Democratic and Republican leaders freely admit that he may make things "hot" for either party.

New Deal Chief Issue.

The "New Deal" looms as the one great political issue of the coming campaign in Virginia. In the light of fast-happening National changes in Government, the program of the Roosevelt Administration, all other political issues in this State appear to have been side-tracked.

Regarding the New Deal, every Republican candidate has taken an open stand against its so-called radical principles. On the Democratic side, however, one finds a sort of negation of principles among some members of their camp. While the nine Representatives seeking reelection are avowed supporters of all New Deal policies, Senator Byrd, up for reelection, has openly opposed several Roosevelt measures.

Mr. Byrd's opposition to these Administration principles has resulted in the rise of three lines of opinion insofar as his reelection this fall is concerned. In the Republican camp one finds the opinion that Mr. Byrd's anti-New Dealism has resulted in the alienation of many Democrats from the party and that these persons would sooner vote the Republican ticket than support their own organization leader who cried for the election of Roosevelt in 1932 and then opposed him within the short period of two years.

Divided on Byrd.

Democrats hold two opinions as to the effect of Mr. Byrd's anti-New Dealism on his reelection this fall. One group of Democrats declares that it will not only not hurt his chances, but that his boldness in taking the stand he thought justified, even not popular at the time, will draw the conservative independent vote of the State to his side. This independent vote, Mr. Byrd's associates declare, will more than cancel off his losses in the ranks of the New Dealers. The other school of Democratic thought has it that Roosevelt's policies are still the most popular form of political philosophy which at least three or four districts of the State have known for a generation and Byrd's opposition to these principles of government will cause his name to be "scratched" by large groups of Democrats election day.

While the average voter discusses New Dealism and anti-New Dealism, and with the election still two months off, claims of victory are being made by leaders of each party. In the Democratic camp many workers declare that their complete slate will win this fall. From the Republican camp there comes quiet rumors of a "surprise" vote this fall which, in effect, is understood to mean that the voters of the State as a whole prefer "Constitutionalism" to "New Dealism" and will show this preference in November. A number of Republican leaders are said to declare that victory for them in the "fighting" Ninth District is sure and that the wind is blowing strongly in their favor in the Second, Sixth and Seventh Districts. In the Eighth and Third Districts, where the G. O. P. also have men in the running, extensive campaigns have been planned after reports have reached Republican leaders of the "wind blowing in our direction."

Both major parties of Virginia appear to be taking into serious consideration the existence of a large group of independent voters throughout the State—an electorate which did not hesitate to throw the Old Dominion into the Republican column in 1928 and then come back with a smashing victory for the Democrats in 1932.

List of Candidates.

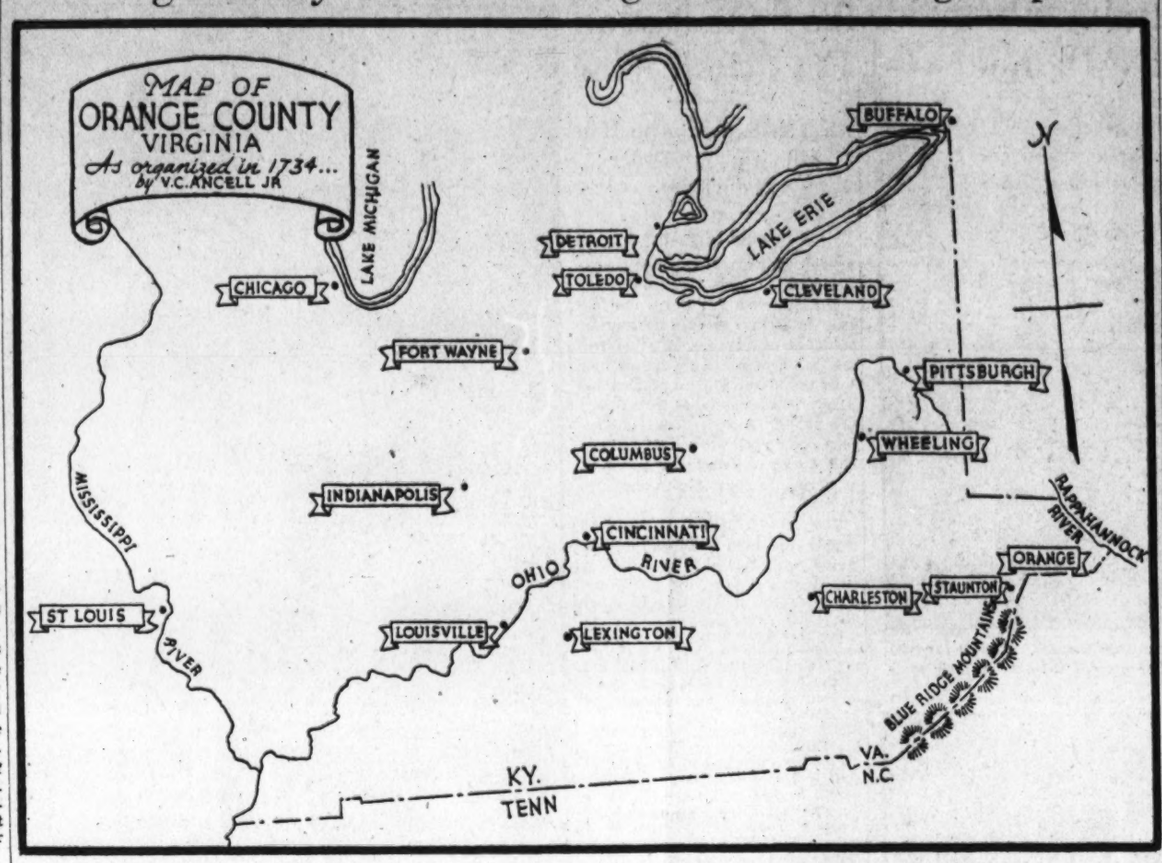
House of Representatives—First District, Representatives S. Otis Bland, Democrat, Newport News, unopposed; Second District, Representative Colgate Darden, Democrat, Norfolk, opposed by Geroud Rouiston, Republican, Norfolk, attorney and veterans' leader; Third District, Representative Andrew Jackson Montague, Democrat, Richmond, opposed by Roy O. Parks, Republican, Richmond, insurance man; Fourth District, Representative Patrick H. Drewry, Democrat, Petersburg, unopposed; Fifth District, Representative T. H. Burch, Democrat, Martinsville, unopposed; Sixth District, Representative Clifton A. Woodrum, Democrat, Roanoke, opposed by Thomas J. Wilson, Republican, Clifton Forge, attorney and member of the Virginia House of Delegates; Seventh District, Representative A. Willis Robertson, Democrat, Lexington, opposed by J. Everett Will, Republican, Lurray, attorney; Eighth District, Representative Howard W. Smith, Democrat, Alexandria, opposed by John Locke Green, Republican, Clarendon, attorney; Ninth District, Representative John W. Flannagan, Jr., Democrat, Bristol, opposed by Fred C. Parks, Republican, Abingdon, Commonwealth attorney for Washington County and Bruce Crawford, Independent, Norton newspaper publisher.

The deadline for the filing of notices of candidacy to stand in the November election expires September 6. Republican leaders have indicated that candidates will not be entered in the First, Fourth and Fifth Districts.

Orange County of 200 Years Ago Was Far-Flung Empire



Orange County, Va., which will hold its bicentennial celebration September 25 to 28, covered a lot of territory when it was formed in 1734, as is shown in the above map, which The Post is reproducing for the first time in any newspaper. The county originally extended from the Virginia Blue Ridge Mountains and the Rappahannock River in the East, to Pittsburgh, Buffalo and Lake Erie in the North, to Lake Michigan, the present location of Chicago and the Mississippi River in the West, and to the present Kentucky-Tennessee-Virginia-North Carolina border in the South. It included all or large portions of the then nonexistent States of Kentucky, Indiana, Missouri, Illinois, Ohio and Michigan and parts of other States. The original county was larger than most European nations. President Roosevelt and Governors of these States have been invited to attend the three-day celebration.

Bible Classes Hold Assembly In Westminster

D. C. Groups Discuss Problems at 13th Annual Conference.

Westminster, Md., Sept. 2 (Spl.).—The Rev. Harvey Baker Smith, 75, pastor of the Christian Church, at Marshall, Mo., delivered the sermon this morning, at the thirteenth annual conference of the Organized Bible Class Association, District of Columbia, in session at Western Maryland College, here. Touching on the theme of the conference "The Way," the Rev. Mr. Smith used as his subject "What Is Eternal Life."

Clarence M. Cook, Baltimore, vice president of the association, presided during services this morning, which included: invocation, Prof. George A. Ross, Calvary Baptist Church, instructor of mathematics at Central High School; responsive reading, Miss Frances L. Guschewski, Metropolitan Baptist; duet, Mr. and Mrs. William E. Brathwaite, National City Christian Church; Scripture reading, Elmer Thompson, Chevy Chase Presbyterian; prayer, A. C. Ridgeway, Columbia Heights Christian Church; offertory selection, National Brass quartet; and benediction, P. M. Barrows, Brightwood Park M. E.

Forums for discussion of Bible class problems, methods, and organization were held in the morning and afternoon under the direction of John H. Johnson, president, men's Bible class, Mount Airy Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia.

During the discussion of problems, the advisability of having laymen as teachers of Bible classes was stressed. Emphasis was also placed on active participation in Bible class work by as many members as possible, and advancement of interest in music. Opportunity to aid in obtaining employment for men out of work, and the fellowship a Bible class creates, were listed among the worthwhile features of Bible class organizations.

George E. Harris, Calvary Baptist Church, treasurer of the association, presided over the forums.

Under the auspices of the Anna May Wood Class, Waugh M. E. Church, and the Box Bible Class, Emory M. E. Church, South, Bible Class hour demonstrations were held this morning. Those in charge of the two groups were:

Anna May Wood Class—Miss Laura Lindley, teacher; Miss Lulu Michael, president, Mrs. Gertrude M. Donovan, vice president, hostess. Box Bible Class—Robert E. Pogue, teacher; Harry Roethek, president; B. J. Hamm, vice president, host.

Speaking on "The Bore of Mockery and the Garment of Salvation," the Rev. Raphael H. Miller, pastor of the National City Christian Church, delivered the principal address this evening. The speaker used as his theme "a Church That Is Made Attractive and Serviceable Is Always Popular While a Church Depressed and Uncertain Is Rejected."

The song service for the evening session was under the direction of William R. Schumucker. Hamline Methodist Church; scripture reading, Mrs. H. E. Davison, National City Christian Church; solo, William E. Braithwaite; prayer, J. T. Ellett, Fifth Baptist Church; closing prayer, N. R. Robinson, vice president, Columbia Heights Christian Church.

More than 300 persons, representing 75 Protestant churches in the District of Columbia, attended today's sessions.

Norfolk's 14-Cent Milk Explained by Dealers

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 2 (AP).—The price of milk is higher in Norfolk than in other Virginia cities, principally because of its "spread out" area and the resulting higher cost of distribution, the Virginia milk commission was told yesterday by local distributors.

This information came in reply to a question directed by Chairman J. S. Agnew, of Burkville, to the several distributors at the hearing held for them to present their side of the question. The price here is 14 cents per quart compared with 13 cents in some other Virginia cities.

Quest for Golden Horseshoe Recalls Orange County Order

By Elisabeth C. Taylor.

Orange, Va., Sept. 2.—A replica of one of the original "golden horseshoes" of the famous Spotswood expedition to the Blue Ridge Mountains has at last been found.

Inquiries as to the location of one of the original jewels for exhibition at the Orange County Bicentennial celebration here September 25 to 28 led to the discovery of a tiny horseshoe which is in the possession of Miss Sallie Spotswood Beach, of Cherrydale, Va.

The story of the horseshoes, "tiny enough for a watch charm," goes back to the days of colonial America, when a royal Governor, Alexander Spotswood, desiring to learn more of the wild land which stretched to the west of the populated strip along the shore, organized a party of the illustrious men of the day to explore this land on horseback. They traveled over the rough country until they reached the summit of the Blue Ridge Mountains and saw the broad stretches of the Shenandoah Valley before them.

Legend has it that the Governor created an honorary organization of the men who accompanied him on the trip, and on their return to Williamsburg, presented each with a souvenir of the expedition, a tiny golden horseshoe. It is not stated that this was an organization knighted by the king, although the name given it was the Knights of the Golden Horseshoe.

Traces of the original relics were lost and the original jewel is still missing, due, says Miss Beach, to its having been stolen during the Civil War. One of the originals is known to have existed in the Spotswood family and it is from this that a replica was struck and presented by Leiper Robinson to his bride, Mary Spotswood Campbell, daughter of Charles Campbell, Virginia historian. The jewel came to Miss Beach directly from her cousin and carries in it the Latin inscription "Sic Juvai Transcendere Montes."

Norfolk Crowded By Fleet Visitors

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 2 (AP).—Thousands of men from battleships, cruisers, destroyers and other naval vessels lined the streets of Norfolk today and tonight. Other thousands will come ashore tomorrow.

In addition thousands of persons from all over the tidewater section, eastern North Carolina and Washington and Baltimore were in the city to visit the fleet.

Tomorrow will see the beginning of an 11-day program for the entertainment of the officers and enlisted men of the fleet. This program was arranged with the approval of Admiral Joseph M. Reeves, commander in chief of the United States fleet, whose flagship, the New Mexico, is in Hampton Roads.

Savage River Dam Advances

Cumberland Mayor Reports Progress in Obtaining Federal Support.

Cumberland, Md., Sept. 2 (Spl.).—Progress in his efforts to obtain approval for the proposed Savage River dam project was reported yesterday by Mayor George W. Legge, who said he has received replies to letters he sent to President Roosevelt and Dr. Morris Cook, chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority, which is supervising all dam construction approved by the PWA.

The Savage River dam would assure a controlled flow of the Potomac River at all seasons and would thus improve sanitary conditions in Cumberland and nearby towns, in addition to aiding industries along the river.

Louis M. Howe, secretary to President Roosevelt, advised Mayor Legge that the matter has been referred to Secretary of the Interior Ickes. Dr. Cook stated that plans for the project have been completed and that he will report to Secretary Ickes within two weeks.

The Upper Potomac River Board, which is leading the movement to have the dam constructed, is planning to form the Upper Potomac Conservation Corporation, following the sugestion of PWA authorities, who said such a corporation should be organized to take over and operate the dam if and when it is built.

Maryland Hunters Find Game Plentiful, Rush for Licenses

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 2 (Spl.).—Reports of a plentiful supply of game has caused an early rush to the Maryland hunting license offices, according to reports received at the office of E. Lee LeCompte, State game warden, here.

Seasons for hunting have been announced by the game warden as follows:

Squirrels—September 15 to October 15, inclusive, then closed until November 15 to December 15, inclusive.

Woodcock — English ringneck, Mongolian or Molanistic mutant pheasants or any other imported species, ruffled grouse, rabbit or hare, wild turkey, partridges (Bob-White quail), November 15 to December 31, inclusive. Federal regulations however restrict woodcock to November 15 to December 15. It is unlawful to hunt or kill the female English ringneck or Mongolian or Molanistic mutant or any other species of imported pheasants at any time.

Raccoon and O'Possum—November 1 to January 31, inclusive, and it is unlawful to hunt between sunrise and sunset.

Muskrat—January 1 to March 15, inclusive.

Salisbury, Md., Sept. 2 (Spl.).—Early and unusually heavy purchases of hunting licenses are reported from the clerk of circuit court's office here.

That section of Wicomico County in the tidal area of Chesapeake Bay, though suffering as did other places from the effects of the storm of August 23, 1933, is staging a great come-back and upland game is said to be even more in evidence than in the past several years.

Mackall Urged Upon Ritchie For Roads Post

Democratic Leaders Will Caucus Unofficially in Baltimore Today.

Baltimore, Sept. 2 (Spl.).—John N. Mackall, who formerly was chairman and chief engineer of the Maryland State Roads Commission, will be suggested to Gov. Ritchie for appointment as chairman of the commission to succeed the late G. Clinton Uhl, it was reported here today.

The Governor is now at Ocean City, surveying the troubled Democratic political situation on the lower Eastern Shore, but he is expected to return here tomorrow. Upon his return Mackall's name will be placed before the Governor. Reports say that several prominent Democratic figures will urge the appointment.

Mr. Mackall resigned as chairman and chief engineer of the State Roads Commission several years ago, following the so-called State roads scandal. No suspicion of irregularities were attached to Mr. Mackall and he was urged not to resign.

Caucus Is Scheduled Today.

Recently, following the resignation of E. Broke Lee as a member of the commission, the Governor was urged to name Mr. Mackall to the vacancy, but the place was filled through the appointment of State Senator William D. Byron, of Washington County. Mr. Mackall is regarded as a highly efficient roads engineer, and his appointment is said to be advocated by leading Democrats of all nine of the Eastern Shore counties.

Leaders from many points throughout the State are expected to attend, an unofficial party caucus here tomorrow and the Governor is to be informed of important political developments during his absence in France.

Meanwhile City Councilman Sidney R. Traub, who is a candidate for the Democratic nomination to the House of Representatives from the Fourth District, today charged that a relative of his opponent, Representative Ambrose Kennedy, was one of the leaders who attacked Mr. Traub last night while he was making a political speech.

The attack occurred at a street corner in East Baltimore while Mr. Traub was addressing a crowd from a portable stand erected by the crew of a sound truck in which the Congressional candidate was campaigning.

As Mr. Traub started to speak, he said today, a group of 10 or 12 men and a score of boys pushed their way to the platform and began heckling him.

Won't Ask Warrant.

"Give me a chance to speak, boys," Mr. Traub cried. In reply, he said, the men made a rush at the platform and one of the men struck him on the ankle with the handle of a broom. Amid great excitement, police were called and pushed their way through the mob to rescue Mr. Traub, who had sought refuge in a drug store.

Today Mr. Traub was nursing his injuries. He said he recognized one of the two leaders of his assailants as a relative of Representative Kennedy, who is seeking renomination. Mr. Traub said he would not ask a warrant for the man's arrest.

Rep. Lewis Attacks New Liberty League

Hagerstown, Md., Sept. 2 (Spl.).—In scoring the recently organized Liberty League, Representative David J. Lewis, of the Sixth Congressional District, in an address before the Democratic Organization Club of Washington County here last night, declared that the league had only to read the general welfare clause of the Constitution to establish the constitutionality of every step President Roosevelt has taken in his efforts to bring back prosperity and to give relief to the needy.

The speaker also pointed out that even Hitlerized Germany today is paying more in relief than the United States and that the President is right in his efforts to protect the masses against hunger and greed.

Attorney General William Preston Lane, head of the Organization Club, directing his remarks at the anti-Ritchie element in Washington County headed by Dr. J. Hubert Wade, who is supporting the candidacy of Dr. Charles Conley, of Frederick, for the gubernatorial nomination, charged that this anti-Ritchie movement here apparently was actuated through a spirit of revenge. Mr. Lane pointed out that since the formation of the Organization Club that a Republican majority of 1,800 in the county had been turned into a Democratic affiliated majority of 1,200.

Cumberland, Md., Sept. 2 (Spl.).—The antiorganization Democrats met at Oldtown last night. W. Carl Richards, candidate for the nomination for State Senator, spoke on "The Walsh Dictatorship vs. the Democratic Party." This week the anti-Ritchie faction will start what they call an "intensive campaign" with one and two meetings each night.

Dr. Charles H. Conley, Frederick, who is opposing Gov. Ritchie in the primary, will speak at the City Hall here. Wednesday W. Carl Richards will broadcast in Cumberland and later speak at meetings at Vale Summit and Midland.

The organization Democrats, under the leadership of State Insurance Commissioner William C. Walsh, have been active and their meetings stress the importance of registration before the primary.

'Lower Shore' Whets Its Ax To 'Get' Ritchie

ing after the local law officers and judiciary failed to act.

Not only did this action infuriate large numbers of persons in Somerset County, where the lynching took place, but also in Wicomico County, where the troops retired after getting their men. In Salisbury, Wicomico County seat, citizens assailed the troops and general disorder followed. There are persons in Salisbury who disapprove of lynchings, but even now become thoroughly angry whenever the visitation of the troops is mentioned.

This feeling undoubtedly diminishes Gov. Ritchie's prospects of carrying the county in both the primary election against Dr. Charles H. Conley, of Frederick, and in the general election. It would be rash to predict Dr. Conley will get this county's five votes in the State convention. Nomination for Governor and Senator in Maryland are made by the convention system. But they must be marked down as doubtful.

Ward Backs Conley.

The chief supporter of the Conley cause here is the retiring State Senator David J. Ward, who some months ago broke away from the regular Democratic organization. He was the Wicomico signer of the petition urging George L. Radcliffe to run against Gov. Ritchie. The latter's supporters here contend that Senator Ward aspires to be Salisbury's postmaster and is ingratiating himself with Senator Millard E. Tydings, sponsor of Mr. Radcliffe.

Perhaps the bitterest fight on the Eastern Shore, if not in the State, is in Somerset County, the scene of the lynching. The lynching, however, does not play a major part in that battle. Of course, it served to increase hostility toward Gov. Ritchie, although in the general election it may bring him a number of Negro votes.

But even before the lynching there probably was deeper hostility to Gov. Ritchie in Somerset County than any other place in the State.

It resulted from a factional fight among the Democrats that goes back more than 20 years, even before Mr. Ritchie was Governor. On one side was one of the most colorful political leaders the State has ever known, Joshua Miles. On the other was Lorie C. Quinn, jr., a Crisfield canner and publisher.

Both men died several years ago, but their followers carry on the battle with much the same vigor. In Somerset, politics is taken with greater seriousness than in any other place as these two groups, almost evenly divided, battle to dominate the affairs of the county.

Poll Fights Frequent.

In years past elections in that county were always accompanied with fisticuffs, at least, and even now the two factions become so bitter that on occasions a Miles partisan will cross the street in order not to walk on the same side with a Quinn man. Instances are related of husbands affiliated with one side forbidding their wives to deal with supporters of the other group.

Gov. Ritchie became enmeshed in that perennial fight when on first entering the statehouse he recognized the Miles faction as the rightful beneficiaries of State patronage. Immediately the Quinn faction declared war on Gov. Ritchie and in their minds everything he has done since is wrong. As a result, Gov. Ritchie has never carried that county.

The two factions this year are again at each others throats, the old Miles group under the leadership of the dead chieftain's nephew, Harding P. Tull, and the "progressives," as the Quinns call themselves, under command of Wallace M. Quinn, brother of Lorie. The Quinn following is chiefly among watermen and people of the lower county, but their influence is said to be spreading into what formerly was Miles territory.

Oyster Industry an Issue.

The Quinns are supporting Dr. Conley and are charging that Gov. Ritchie by keeping the Potomac River oyster beds closed and by assessing a gasoline tax of 4 cents a gallon on work boats is driving all watermen to the relief rolls. It is an attractive issue among the watermen, but Gov. Ritchie is not fully to blame. His followers in the last Legislature, for instance, attempted to get through a bill reopening the Potomac River beds, but were blocked when one of the Governor's sharpest enemies, Senator J. Allan Coad of St. Marys County, filibustered against the measure. Nevertheless, the Quinns probably are correct when they claim they will carry the county for Dr. Conley by a 1,000 majority. They also claim they will capture control of the party machinery in the county next week. This is not so certain, since the Tull-Miles faction has a way of keeping its head above water.

Somerset Republicans, who always have benefited from the Democratic factional fight, this year are having some trouble. In that party there is a hot three-cornered fight over the nomination for State's attorney between John B. Robins, the incumbent; F. Kirk Maddrix and L. Creston Beauchamp, retiring State Senator. The fight is the result of Negro protests against Mr. Robins' inactivity in connection with the lynching.

Negroes make up a large part of the Somerset Republican party and it is believed Mr. Robins will be defeated. It is the consensus that with the fight between Mr. Maddrix and Mr. Beauchamp, the former may squeeze through as the victor. But that race will be close. Harry T. Phoebus, who first announced as a candidate for the Republican gubernatorial nomination is unopposed for State Senator.

The political scene in Worcester County is marked by "bobtailed" fights in the Democratic ranks. In this county the fight between Gov. Ritchie and Dr. Conley also is doubtful, although there is less feeling against Gov. Ritchie. No organized effort has been put forth for Dr. Conley, his prospects depending chiefly on the activity of a few personal friends and the hostility to the Governor.

Dorchester is another county where Gov. Ritchie has never been an idol. Yet it is believed there by some of the Republicans and several impartial observers that Gov. Ritchie may win the county's vote next week. Little effort is being put forth on either side. In fact, interest in politics in Dorchester is more apathetic than it has been in years. Had Mayor Howard W. Jackson of Baltimore remained in the race for Governor, he could have carried the Democratic primary in Dorchester, it is contended at Cambridge.

Thus, to recapitulate, feeling is that Dr. Conley is certain to carry Somerset County with four convention votes; Wicomico and Worcester Counties are held doubtful, with five and four convention votes each, and Gov. Ritchie may carry Dorchester County with four convention votes.

Virginia Legion Unites to Fight Bureau Change

By Charles Clark.

Lynchburg, Va., Sept. 2.—Eight hundred members of the American Legion assembled here today for the opening tomorrow of the sixteenth annual State convention.

Bunting draped streets, the blare of bugles, and the roll of drums welcomed the legionanires. Hundreds of citizens welcomed the several score beauty contestants—one from each post in the State selected to vie for the honor of the most beautiful girl in Virginia.

Politics, which generally rules every State convention, was lacking on the eve of tomorrow's program, for the veterans for the first time in the Virginia Legion conventions, have forgotten their differences in a concerted drive toward harmony.

Two Questions on Slate.

There are but two controversial questions, the first is the proposal to take away the authority of past post commanders to vote on questions of State policy. The other important proposal would direct the State Legion group to oppose to the "last ditch" the administration plan to move the regional office from Richmond to Roanoke.

Oppositionists will charge in convention tomorrow and the next day, that the plan will work hardships on war veterans; for instance, they say, a veteran from Arlington County in northern Virginia, would be compelled to travel to Roanoke instead of going to Washington for diagnosis and treatment.

Robert L. (Bob) Insko, of Quantico, is the strongest candidate for State commander for the new year. In fact, there is at present no other candidate. Likewise, Virginia Beach is as yet uncontested for next year's convention.

Because of the fast arrival of veterans and their wives this afternoon, an air show was almost forgotten, but few attended the "circus," electing to meet old friends and acquaintances in the lobbies of the local hotels.

Representative Clifton A. Woodrum, of Roanoke, will address the convention tomorrow, and perhaps "explain" the move of the regional office to his home city.

Gen. Butler Assails War As U. S. 'Bill Collecting'

Baltimore, Sept. 2 (AP).—Maj. Gen. Smedley D. Butler, in a clash of opinion here last night with Mayor Howard W. Jackson and Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckord over the question of war, said America entered the World War on the side of the allies because the allies owed America more money than Germany did.

Speaking at the reunion of the Twenty-nineth (Blue and Gray) Division, Gen. Butler said "we went into the World War because European nations owed us money and we went in on the side of the allies because they owed us more than the Germans did."

"Never again will I leave the shores of America to fight with anyone or for anything," the plain-spoken former Marine officer asserted.

Speaking immediately after him, Gen. Reckord, commander of the Twenty-ninth Division and adjutant general of Maryland, asserted America entered the World War for "the principles of freedom, justice, and equality."

Mayor Jackson of Baltimore said the economic condition of the country was a more important issue than war.

The remaining 20 counties are expected to select their duchesses within the next two weeks. Each duchess, clad in costume typical of the period when the county she represents was founded, will take part in the pageant, accompanied by four attendants. Duchesses will be selected by the Maryland State Federation of Women's Clubs, of which Mrs. Rudolph S. Allen, of College Park, is president. More than 3,000 persons will take part in the pageant.

Girl Swims 24 Miles; Boston Light and Back

Boston, Sept. 2 (AP).—Charlotte L. Arne, a 17-year-old high school girl, today became the first woman ever to swim to Boston Light and back, a distance of 24 miles by boat.

Miss Arne, started at 5:55 a. m. and reached the light at 12:34 p. m. She touched bottom there and immediately turned about, reaching her starting point at 7:30 p. m. For nourishment during the swim she partook only of lump sugar and water.

Trial of Two In Tea House Murder Ready

Third and Fourth Suspects to Face Court for Amick Death.

After a lapse of almost three years since the sensational Bladensburg Tea House shooting, two more men will go on trial at Upper Marlboro tomorrow for the murder of Grover Amick, of Washington.

Although the State faces the difficult task of rounding up enough witnesses to convict the two defendants, James Orlando and Joseph D'Alexandro, officials yesterday confidently prepared for the trial.

Two other men, James Wallace and James Zalenski, were convicted of second degree murder shortly after the shooting in November, 1931. They are serving penitentiary terms of 18 years each.

State's Attorney Ala.. Bowie said that summonses had been issued for almost all the former witnesses, but it remains to be seen how many can be recalled to Marlboro.

D'Alexandro, alias Joseph Reno, was arrested recently by New York police and returned to Maryland. Orlando was arrested in Philadelphia. Both pleaded not guilty at a special session of the Prince Georges County Circuit Court.

De Molay Session Set Today at Hagerstown

Hagerstown, Md., Sept. 2 (Spl.).—Several hundred members of De Molay chapters from Baltimore, Annapolis, Cumberland, Frederick and Hagerstown will attend the State conclave here tomorow. The conclave was organized a year ago at Camp Albert C. Ritchie. Officers will be elected.

Services, Band Concert Mark Firemen's Day

Memory of Deceased Members Honored at Temple.

The annual memorial services of the National Firemen's Association convention, now in session at Alexandria, Va., were held yesterday afternoon in the auditorium of the George Washington National Masonic Memorial Temple, with association president Sergt. A. J. Bargagni, of the District Fire Department, presiding.

Invocation was offered by the Rev. Charles Monroe of St. Paul's Church, New Orleans, La., followed by selections by the Capitol quartet, composed of Arthur Pearson, first tenor; Earl Brown, second tenor; Homer Pope, first bass, and William W. Kegler, second bass.

The Rev. Norman Roberts, pastor of the Methodist Protestant Church, of Alexandria, and president of the Columbia Fire Company, No. 4, of Alexandria, eulogized the memory of the departed members of the association. President Bargagni then asked the audience to stand for a minute of silent tribute, and the quartet sang "Still, Still With Thee," by Gerrish.

Benediction, delivered by the Rev. Monroe, concluded the services.

Band Concert Given.

Later in the afternoon a band concert was given on the steps of the Masonic Temple by the Citizens Band of Alexandria. The United States Army Band, scheduled to give this concert, was unable to appear.

The final business session of the convention was held in the evening in the auditorium of the temple.

An address of welcome was delivered by Mayor E. C. Davison, who extended an invitation to the association to hold all future meetings in Alexandria, which still boasts of a fire company of which George Washington was a member, and a hand engine donated to the Friendship Fire Company by Washington in 1774.

President A. J. Bargagni introduced the mayor, the Rev. Noel J. Allen, who delivered the invocation, and the principal speaker of the evening, State Fire Marshal Sherwood Brockwell, of North Carolina.

Unofficially, heads of the association stated yesterday that the naming of the convention city for 1935 would not be done until an effort had been made to have President Roosevelt declare the Saturday before Labor Day as the "National Firemen's Day." If this is successful, Washington will probably be selected for the next convention, they said.

The annual Labor Day parade today will begin at 11 a. m., traversing 15 squares on Washington street in Alexandria. Estimates place the number of people participating in the march as approximately 5,000. There will be 40 floats featured, and the parade will take about three hours to pass a given point, it is believed.

Contests Today.

At 2:30 p. m. today the contests for bands and drum corps will begin at Baggett's Stadium on upper King street. Winners will be awarded cups and cash prizes.

In all, winners in the various contests, including the parade, will compete for $1,050 in cash prizes and 46 cups.

The reviewing stand to accommodate 175 distinguished guests, including a number of foreign diplomats, has been erected at Washington and Queen streets.

Besides the firemen, business organizations, civic and military units will join the parade. A delegation of 1,000 CCC men will also participate.

The United States destroyers Fox and Humphreys and the United States Coast Guard cutter Apache, anchored in the channel of the river opposite the naval torpedo station, were thrown open for public inspection yesterday from 1 to 5 p. m., and similar visiting hours will be maintained today, coincident with the Labor Day festivities.

Dairymen to Hold Field Event Today

Bowling Green, Va., Sept. 2 (Spl.).—Caroline County dairymen will convene for the annual Cream Producers field day tomorrow at Spring Grove Farm, near De Jarnette.

J. H. Quisenberry, district agricultural agent, will speak on "The Progress of the AAA." P. H. Reaves will discuss the place of dairy cows in the county's agricultural system. H. C. Kirkpatrick, field secretary for the Southern States Cooperative, will give a talk on "Graded Eggs."

Other speakers will be County Agent C. B. Lanford, who will preside; Claude Parcell, manager of the Farmers Creamery, and R. F. Holberton, manager of the Milford Cream Station.

A cream-judging contest, open to all county dairymen, will be conducted under the supervision of R. P. Keithley.

Church Picnic Crowd to Hear Md. Candidates

St. Barnabas Event Today Will Be Held at Leesburg Grounds.

The annual Labor Day picnic of St. Barnabas' Episcopal Church will be held this afternoon on the grounds near Leeland, Md.

Candidates for office in the coming elections will speak, starting at 4 p. m. Charles C. Marbury, Democratic member of the House of Delegates, seeking reelection, will preside.

John Philip Hill, Republican candidate for United States Senator; Oliver Metzerott, Republican member of the House of Delegates, minority floor leader the last session of Legislature, who is seeking reelection, and L. Harold Sothoron, Democratic candidate for the House of Delegates, will speak.

A chicken dinner will be served at 1 p. m., followed by a baseball game at 1:30 p. m. between the Landover and Langdon teams. There will be dodge ball, horseshoe pitching, a turtle race and a slow motor race.

Dancing from 9 to 12 p. m. in the parish hall will conclude the program.

Carolina Wind Heralds Storm Racing for Shore

Oracoke, N. C., Sept. 2 (AP).—A high tide and strong winds struck the outer coast here late today and the barometer had fallen to 29.84.

At Alexandria Today.

There is no thrill in modern urban existence comparable to watching a well organized and equipped fire department engaged in its work of stopping the spread of flames. Among the elements, fire is man's best friend; it is also his worst enemy. Thus millions of dollars are spent annually to prevent fires and to smother them when they start. Fighting fire has advanced, like all other technical duties, until it is today a science.

In the metropolis fire fighting is studied in theory and practice with all the attention that the engineer gives to the erection of a bridge or the building of a skyscraper. Where huge stone piles arise fire seldom has a chance to spread. For the fire departments, thrilling though they may be in action, spend as much time and effort upon the prevention of fire as they do upon fighting it.

The telegraph, the wireless in coastal cities which maintain fireboats, the science of chemistry, in fact knowledge of innumerable technics are used today to fight fire. Fire fighting is a far call from the volunteer departments of old which were compounded of noise, excitement and water buckets. It is a far call, too, from the not-so-long-ago days of the white prancing horses!

Fires are a part of city life. Remember Chimmy Fadden, who could tell the difference, at a length of ten blocks, between the wail of the siren on an ambulance, a patrol wagon, and the fire engine? There are many city-borns who, like Chimmy, can tell you with the cocking of an ear if the siren he hears signifies a first, second, or third alarm. A fire in the country is different. It is tragic, always. Seldom is it conquered. But in the city, where cellars are deep, and buildings high, the smoke eaters whose lives are devoted to running hose and swinging axes, are professional men to whom nothing matters more than keeping down the loss of life or property.

Whether a man is a country-town volunteer or a city fireman, whether professional or amateur, there is one thing that is always characteristic of him. And that is courage. It is behind knowledge, behind science. It is the sine qua non of fire fighting through the ages. And while one will not hear it mentioned at Alexandria today, where the National Fireman's Association is meeting, it is a word not to be forgotten. It is the one thing that never fails, even when the pressure drops to zero.

Banditry In Manchukuo.

Tension in the relations of Soviet Russia and Japan has been augmented by another unfortunate incident. A train on the Chinese Eastern Railroad was derailed and attacked by bandits on Thursday night. Reports from Shanghai indicate that 10 Japanese were killed, 16 others were wounded and 2 Americans were kidnaped for ransom.

Aside from the fact that the railroad on which the bandit army made its assault is a bone of contention between Japan and Russia, the incident has disquieting implications. It is said to be the thirty-second bandit outrage on the Chinese Eastern Railroad during the last four months. Apparently Manchukuo has not fully established that degree of law and order which was promised, at least by implication, when the new government was set up. Japan took control of Manchuria on the pretext that occupation was essential to protect the inhabitants from banditry. It is rather ironical that depredations of this sort should break out again just as Manchukuo is making her bid for diplomatic recognition.

The Japanese press accuses Soviet employes of the railroad of complicity with the bandits. Since the breakdown of negotiations for sale of this road to Manchukuo, a large number of its Russian employes have been arrested on charges of sabotage. New arrests may be expected to follow the fracas of Thursday. Is Japan building up a case to justify seizure of the Chinese Eastern? Arguments advanced to excuse the creation of a puppet state in Manchuria constitute a precedent which becomes more ominous with each new incident of this kind.

Pie-Pilfering.

"Nonchalant" is the adjective which reporters employ for that bandit who, on Saturday evening, ate a stolen pie from his left hand while holding-up a grocery store with his right. Certainly at first glance, this word seems well chosen. Dr. Webster defines "nonchalant" as "lacking in warmth of feeling," and it is likely indeed that, when the intruder thus added the insult of scorn to the injury of pillage, all the warmth of feeling involved rested with the party of the second part.

But the event may hold deeper implications. Perhaps New York avenue's miscreant merely ate the pie—instead of using it as a weapon—in order to demonstrate that here was at least one criminal who had not learned his profession from the movies. Much also depends on the sequence of events. The bandit's money-haul was a mere five dollars: it is possible that he copped the custard to raise his wages to the minimum decreed by the Hold-Up Industry Code.

Clarifying 7(a).

A clear-cut and important step toward clarification of Section 7(a) of the recovery act has been taken by the National Labor Relations Board in its decision in the Houde Engineering Corporation case. The decision is that the representatives chosen by a majority of the employes in a particular establishment, or unit thereof, should be recognized by management as the "exclusive bargaining agency" for the negotiation of industrial disputes.

This decision is at variance with previous official fumbling over the interpretation of 7(a) and does not altogether harmonize with the system of proportional representation which the President's automobile agreement sought to establish. There can be little doubt, however, that it is not merely a sensible and just decision, but also the only solution which holds hope of terminating the epidemic of disastrous strikes into which the country is being plunged.

If collective bargaining means anything it means that spokesmen authorized to negotiate for those whom they represent should confront each other squarely and fairly. This means that labor in the plant or its unit should have a single group of spokesmen, just as management has a single group. It is no more logical that the employes should have two or more distinct forms of representation than it would be for the stockholders. Management properly centralizes its responsibility in collective bargaining and it is in the public interest that labor should do the same.

The labor board decision does not of course mean that the trade union will necessarily be the body to represent the employes. What that body shall be depends entirely on the result of free and uncontrolled plant elections, which can be and are being secured. In the Houde case, for instance, 1,105 employes voted for the automobile workers' union to represent them, while 674 cast votes in favor of a company union. Had the vote gone the other way the trade union would be debarred as the agency to conduct collective bargaining in that factory.

The decision of the Labor Relations Board is so simple, practical and harmonious with the principles of democracy that its indorsement by the great majority of fair-minded Americans is assured. And one may feel equally certain that loyal observance of the ruling, by labor and by management, will be a firm foundation for development of a fair and workable code of industrial relations.

In the industries where trade unionism is not accepted the claim is made that the great majority of the workers do not want it. If that is the case, there will be no cause for employer criticism of this ruling. Only where the employes themselves give a clear majority in behalf of trade unionism will it have Government recognition as the official bargaining agency. To deny unionism that right when it has the majority is to insure righteous labor resentment and perpetuation of the present anarchic industrial turmoil.

"Pieces Of Eight!"

Who says romance is dead? In the March of 1933, the Federal Government ordered an end of gold-hoarding and the surrender of all gold coins. In this bright September of 1934, two Baltimore boys, children of poor parents, discover a buried treasure of $11,424 in gold coins, not to bother about a tidy sum in silver "cart-wheels."

And it is all quite according to the Tom Sawyer tradition. The lads had formed a secret society. For their dark meeting place they chose the dark cellar beneath the home occupied by the elder boy's mother. And there they dug to hide their cryptic records—and there, digging, they came upon that which somebody had hidden long before them.

Was that somebody the old sea-captain, Donaldson, who occupied the house, and died in it 40 years ago? Or does good St. Nicholas walk modern Baltimore's streets as once he walked in Myra, and does he still toss money through windows for the children of needy widows? It is to be hoped that the latter hypothesis is the correct one; for then the heartless laws of treasure-trove could scarcely be applied, and Theodore Jones and Henry Grob would have a better chance to buy Mrs. Jones the washing machine, which Theo says she needs in her business, and to purchase Mrs. Grob the little house for which, says Harry, she has been vainly saving all her life.

Lingering London.

Mussolini remakes the Eternal City, but restores its most ancient monuments: a more restless spirit than the Duce's—a spirit ruthless because disembodied—seeks slowly to destroy the long-known London of tradition and to replace it by an unknown metropolis of modernity. The Paternoster Row of literature has passed into oblivion and almost out of memory. Blackfriars is no more recognizable to even the loyalest lover of its past. Were Barrie's Sentimental Tommy to return to earth, he would be lost in what was once that Fleet street where he learned the profession of journalism before journalists became newspaper-men. And now, if you please, the autogyro hovers over Trafalgar Square, almost knocking Nelson from his monument in an effort to solve London's traffic problem!

But to the human being who is not in a hurry—some examples of which type still survive—London's traffic problem has ever been one of London's chiefest charms. It existed when the delectable hansom cab bounced over the cobbled streets, the driver seated where he could not have turned obtrusive eyes—had he wished to—upon those lovers who were his most frequent "fare," the double doors leaving swain and maid an uninterrupted view and yet hiding their tender handclasp.

London's traffic was a problem and an intellectual stimulant when the muffered drivers of horse-drawn buses exchanged marvels of Cockney vituperation across locked wheels on 'O'born 'Ill. London's traffic proved a puzzling delight even after the automobile essayed to solve it. May not one hope that, while all else romantic fades from London, London's traffic will at least remain a riddle—for the sake of the experts paid to solve it—for the sake of courting couples bound to shabby Soho restaurants—for the sake of the immortal man who always stands in need of an excuse to ease the tension of his late arrival at dinner?

In Deep Water.

Disputes over relief in both Pennsylvania and Texas emphasize the gravity of the problem which is confronting the FERA.

At Austin the Federal Relief Administrator is being seriously criticized because of his insistence that Texas pay half the cost of supporting that State's destitute citizens. The Legislature is in special session, considering the issuance of bonds—the last of a $20,000,000 issue authorized recently by an amendment to the constitution—to match Federal relief funds. But, with the number of families on relief increasing rapidly, it is feared that these bonds will not be sufficient to uphold the State's end of the relief burden. Additional taxation is not considered feasible. Taking note of the fact that the FERA is supplying all relief funds in some States, Texas legislators naturally look to Washington for more aid.

In Pennsylvania the situation is not dissimilar. Relief funds are almost exhausted, and there is no unobligated money in the treasury. Further borrowing would require a constitutional amendment. Instead of planning ahead, Gov. Pinchot waited until an emergency developed and then began pleading for special favors from the FERA. Administrator Hopkins has properly informed him that no additional Federal aid will be forthcoming until Pennsylvania takes steps to provide at least half of her own relief needs.

Surely the rich State of Pennsylvania ought to be able to take care of its own unemployed. Like the proverbial ostrich, Pennsylvania seeks to evade that responsibility on the apparent assumption that FERA funds are a gift. Of course, it is more pleasant for local politicians to have the Federal Government collect taxes to pay this enormous relief bill. But that very practice encourages extravagance and loose relief policies. The most constructive step that could be taken in the administration of relief would be the restoration of a greater share of the burden to local governments.

A glance at the record of the FERA tends to strengthen that conclusion. Congress has appropriated $1,950,000,000 for relief. Before the current month has passed the FERA will have spent the last of this sum, and it will be necessary to draw upon the $500,000,000 which the RFC is authorized to advance for relief. Further appropriations soon after Congress assembles in January seem inevitable. The situation appears to be far more serious in Washington than it is in the State capitals.

Mr. Hopkins deserves commendation for the firm, if belated, stand he has taken against further imposition of State burdens upon the FERA. Even so, that agency is up against a gigantic problem. Unless its inclination to support strikers who voluntarily leave their jobs is held in check, it may be left completely without funds before Congress meets.

The Best Short Stories.

Several years ago Edward J. O'Brien exiled himself to England and set up shop for himself as an expert in the American short story. Annually, from that distant shore, he has published an anthology of his discoveries. The catholicity of his taste has ranged from the obscurantism of "The Little Review" to the competent stereotypes of "Red Book Magazine." His word has become a sort of final authority, and his book as much a part of the autumn as the Pulitzer Prize is a part of the spring.

The short story is a peculiarly American literary form. At least, remembering Poe, we have taken it unto ourselves as our own. We have probably developed more good short story writers than we have first-class novelists, and practically all of our literary experimenters have worked first in this medium. It is only natural, then, when the critical confraternity keeps telling us that only by the expression of a social conscience can our writers become great, that we should expect to find our short story writers becoming increasingly preoccupied with social themes. It might be thought that Mr. O'Brien, who has consistently shunned the orthodox, would give us, in 1934, some indication of this trend.

But no, as the French say. Despite the fact that all observers have noticed this drift, Mr. O'Brien makes no mention of it in his annual resume. Perhaps, as one reviewer has pointed out, he does not think it an important enough trend for serious analysis and comment. But it is more likely that Mr. O'Brien, from his study in the tight little isle, has grown complacent in his old age. Surely he can not be ignorant of the growing number of revolutionary writers who are finding expression in the descendants of those same little magazines from which he so copiously drew his anthology material in the past? Perhaps it is that, full of years if not wisdom, he finds the younger writers too much wrapped up in a Marxian blanket to be able fully and freely to express themselves.

The Government seems to be experiencing about as much difficulty in trying to inflate the dollar as some have in trying to stretch it.

When a person boasts that he is as good as anybody, almost anybody is as good as he is.

Fair Deal for Philippines.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Since 1899 the Philippine Islands has been a problem to the American people, but a hopeful, enlightened, rich land for the Filipinos. While the Americans planned, and still are planning, what to do with it, the Filipinos accepted, and still are accepting, provided the terms are reasonable, whatever was, and is, the offer for national improvement.

Apparently, during the last 35 years both peoples thought and worked hard together to bring the Philippines toward the pink of civilization. At present their train of thoughts is speeding to economic safety solely for the 13,000,000 peaceful, freedom-loving Filipinos.

Being familiar with the pages of progress made in their country during the last 36 years of American administration, the Filipinos feel that any amount of expression is inadequate to justify their full gratitude to the American people, whose foresight, integrity, optimism and humanitarian principles are unquestionable.

The Filipinos' surprising stride in education, their great amelioration in public sanitation, their rapid expansion in commercial endeavors, their fast-developing abilities to run nearly every office in their stable government, patterned under the American democratic system, their rapidly improving houses, roads and modern means of transportation, these, and innumerable other things, make them honor and love the American people.

But, naturally, no matter how much progress has been made in the Philippines during the last 36 years, the Filipinos want their liberty. To realize and keep it is their most desired goal.

If the United States sets the Philippines adrift under the imponderable uncertainty of present conditions, Uncle Sam may see a majestic neighbor apply his philosophy of catching the hen that lays the golden eggs, which Uncle Sam now has the greatest pleasure of possessing.

It may be the unavoidable cause of his entering another world war to protect the lives of those whom he loves.

The Filipinos know their strength and abilities. They cherish the Philippines and want it free, but while the Congress of the United States desires to grant them their complete and absolute freedom, sooner or later, they deserve a fair deal in the meantime.

Sees No Boom.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The following is quoted from a recent news item: "'The nationalization of silver will have the same effect on money as the discovery of 'a new mountain of gold,' according to Senator Elmer Thomas, Oklahoma, Democrat * * *

"'Past experience has shown that whenever a new gold field was discovered a period of development, progress and prosperity resulted,' he said. 'This will have the same effect, resulting in more money and cheaper money.'"

Admitted that "a period of development, progress and prosperity" has followed new discoveries, new "gold rushes," the Senator is somewhat mixed in his relation to "cause and effect."

New gold discoveries, with "development, progress and prosperity" have resulted from the effects of a "depression," hundreds turning to gold seeking and gold mining, stimulated by low costs and low wages, hard times the "cause," the new discoveries the "effect"—of hard times, "depression."

"Prosperity" follows a depression, inevitably, and such, only by contrast. Adjustment of the factors which brought on the "depression"—and, evidently, by the Senator's statement, lack of "new discoveries" was not one of them—brings on prosperity, the new production of gold is a stimulating factor, but the "period of development, progress and prosperity resulted," not from the discovery of the new gold fields.

"Silver inflation," for that is what the Senator is thinking, bears no relation to the discovery of new gold fields, of new wealth, of new employment, such as resulted from depressions. L. S. ROPES.

As Others See It.

"Back to America."

In the beginning, it was the high task of the Republican party to preserve America a nation.

Now there is laid on it again a stern responsibility—to keep America American.

And to that end, there is first the duty to keep the Republican party Republican.

The party now in possession of the Government, whatever else it may have become, is at least not Democratic.

Measured either by its history, which it has repudiated, or by its pledges, which it has broken, it has separated itself from everything Democratic except the name.

The States' rights and strict Constitutional construction of Jefferson; the decentralized banking of Jackson; the sound money and tariff reform of Tilden and Cleveland; the individualistic liberalism and the internationalism of Wilson, and the limitation of government and the expansion of liberty of them all—these were Democracy once. Some of them were good and some of them were bad, but all were Democratic.

Now, whether for better or for worse, but at least in repudiation of Democracy, they have given way to nationalist centralization; to the stretching of the Constitution beyond its limit of elasticity; to putting the Government into banking; to monetary inflation and prohibitive tariffs; to regimentation and economic isolation, and to the merging of individual initiative into an expanding Governmental control of business. And at this moment, in California, a party that calls itself Democratic is threatening us with undisguised socialism. All this is the repudiation by the party of its own history.

And as for party pledges, lists have been compiled of platform planks and campaign promises, every one the exact reverse of present performances * * *

While these policies were emergency experiments, it was the duty of the Republican minority, yielding to the mandate of the people, to stand aside and give them their trial. Opposition rested in abeyance, and even words of warning were prudently suspended. But now that the test has come, and we see the menace to Americanism of the left-wing threat to make emergency expedients permanent, the duty of criticism is immediate, and preparation for the inevitable responsibility of action is urgent. * * *

But for the responsibility, the Republican party must stand alertly by ready in thought and in organization

And first in thought. For in these days of impulsive opportunism and plausible fancies, nothing is so sorely needed as clear and fearless thinking.

The Republican party must have the courage to be both reactionary and progressive—reactionary, because the Americanism we must restore is behind us, and the direction toward it is backward; and progressive, because that Americanism, when restored, though unchanged in its fundamentals, must be radically rebuilt in its superstructure. We must be equally on guard against the stupidity which would change nothing and the recklessness which would overturn everything.

The reactionary banner, with this motto, we may fly as a proud standard of honor. "Back to America" may be backward, but it is the right direction.

Indeed, we may find this part even too easy. We did before when, tired of Wilsonism, we turned to Harding on the proposition of restoring the "normalcy" of a prewar world. We all longed for that world, and voted for its resurrection. But it was dead, slain by the war, and even our wishes could exhume nothing but its corpse.

Likewise, we may again seek another Harding, to bring back the predepression world, which we would all like revived. But that world, too, is dead, and will never live again. The desire for it may win one election, but the Republican party will be untrue to its trust if it stops at that. It would be reactionism in the false and fatal sense.

Unless we are to follow the rest of the world into Communist or Fascist dictatorship, the progressive Republican party must offer America something more constructive than merely to go back to the old ways, either of government or of business. Those of us who were the beneficiaries of that system may wish we could have it back. But we are far outnumbered by the victims of its wreckage. Unless we can offer to these disinherited and dispossessed of our past a new America in which they can have their part, they will join the anti-Americans, to destroy what they are forbidden to share. Conservatism may dream of the world in which it prospered, but it can not have it, unchanged. That world is dead. Those who most profited in it must reconcile themselves to give up some things they would like to keep, lest they lose all.

Crime and Paroles.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Paradoxical as it may sound to some people, those journalists who are in the habit of disapproving political dictatorships often forget that they themselves are forcing their opinions upon millions of their readers, arbitrarily, regardless of whether people approve of their logic or not.

For example, the editor of The Post, commenting upon Van Meter, wonders why he had refused to reform in spite of all the decency shown to him by the parole system, and, with the prerogative of an authorized spokesman for psychologists and philosophers, accuses these masters of mind-science as being unable to explain the seeming enigma. Unless a journalist has demonstrated his knowledge on these subjects, or has actually consulted authoritative specialists, he is not warranted to speak in their behalf.

This writer very humbly, yet with profound conviction, declaring himself as a thoroughly experienced student of the above-mentioned branches of science or art, is willing to volunteer the guess that criminals are seldom pedantic or child-minded, and, if they are once possessed with the motive of avenging themselves upon society's sin of omission, are not likely to be dispossessed of their avowed motives merely because they are paroled. They, very naturally, feel that authorities are merely evading their responsibilities for the setting up of a more humane order.

The Post Impressionist

"It's Your Party!"

Postoffice, Monday.

IN the restaurant where we eat our rather lonely dinner, our backs were to their table, but we recognized them as soon as they were seated there; they had sat at it so many times before. Well, not precisely they, but couples so precisely like them. And we made sure of our recognition with the initial words uttered by the male of this couple dining together for the first time:

"Now, Miss Smith, here's the menu-card. Just you name what you want. This is to be your evening, you know, and whatever you say goes. What kind of a cocktail, eh?"

So the formula started.

She said: "Really, I think I'd like a little sherry."

He said: "Now, don't say that, Miss Smith. I want you to have some appetite. I want you to enjoy this dinner. I know what you need; you need an Old-Fashioned whisky cocktail."

She said, no, really, she didn't think——

He said: "That's just modesty, that is. Waiter, two Old-Fashioned. Now, how about the soup, Miss Smith? A nice, strong consommé, what?"

"It's a warm night. If I could have a glass of tomato juice——"

"Listen, Miss Geraldine, this isn't a diet-kitchen; this is a restaurant—and the best in your town. You're not to say what you think you need; you're to say what you want. I know what you want. You want that consomme. Two consommes, waiter. 'Course you like soft-shelled crabs, Miss Geraldine?"

"This sole sounds kind of ——"

"It's the start of the week, Geraldine. When you've eaten at restaurants as long as I have, you'll know it's not safe to order fish except Fridays and Saturdays. I used to know a fellow whose brother was a chef, and they buy 'em at early market Friday, and after Saturday evening it stands to reason they've been kept too long, no matter how good the cold storage plant is. Isn't that so, waiter?"

"Well, sir, those crabs are very good."

"What'd I tell you, Gerrie? Softshells for both, waiter. Gerrie, I bet you anything you like you like your steak rare like I do."

"Little girl, can't I make you understand this is a party? Your boss is my friend; that's why I came to Washington—to sell him that bill of goods. But he's a slave-driver, all right, and you need nourishment. Chicken-a-la-king! Why, they have chicken-a-la-king on the lunch-lists of all the cafeterias nowadays. Like as not, you had it at lunch today. Yesterday, anyhow. Waiter, make those steaks rare, and smother 'em in onions, not too brown, see? No. No string beans. Two double portions of these sugared sweet potatoes and some corn-on-the-cob."

She didn't say anything, then.

He said: "And for a salad. They got a great line of salads here. If you honestly think there ought to be chicken somewhere on this order, why, as I told you, it's your party, dear—so how about some chicken-salad? Their lobster-salad's better yet, but it's all up to you."

She could be heard murmuring something about "plain lettuce."

"Lettuce?" her host echoed. "Why, dearie, you know what they're using lettuce for these times? They're using it to take up meat-space in sandwiches, that's what they're using lettuce for. Ain't I right, waiter?"

Said the waiter: "Of course, there's some lettuce in the other salads, sir—in the chicken and lobster."

"Hear that?" asked the host jubilantly. "Two lobster salads, waiter."

Dessert next:

"Dearie, with the kind of pies they have here, do you think I'm going to let you spoil your party with water-ice or raw fruit? Apple pie for two, waiter. And, dearie, you'll thank me. Just wait 'till you bite into the crust of it—it's an inch thick!"

* * *

As we passed that party table, we looked—believe it or not—at the man first. And he looked just the way you've guessed he did. He looked thoroughly pleased with himself and his meal.

Then we looked at his guest. She looked—well, she looked humbly the way his guest would look.

Still, you never can tell . . .

We sat in the lobby and read the papers. We sat there a long time. Perhaps we dozed, for we'd had a full day at the office. Perhaps we dreamed . . .

* * *

An hour and a half? . . .

But if we slept, somebody awakened us. And we weren't dreaming when that party-giver stamped out.

He stamped out alone.

He saw us. He was plainly in that state of mind where such a man has to talk to somebody, and he favored us with his reflections because we happened to be the only person within earshot. He said:

"Brother, don't ever try to be nice to a woman. They don't appreciate kindness. I brought one here tonight and treated her like a queen. And what did she do? She let some young guy with about 10 cents in his pocket cut in on our first dance—and she hasn't been near me since!"

Barging Through Europe With Carlisle Bargeron

An Unforeseen Rest.

HELSINGFORS, Finland—Dear Aleck: Going out of the harbor here en route to Leningrad we ran across a sandbar which gave us a decided jolt but apparently did no harm. Nevertheless the captain stops a few miles out for a thorough examination and then apparently with a view to making sure of his insurance protection, turns about and comes back into the harbor for a diver. We have to wait all night and part of the following day for him and when he finally shows up he goes about his business most leisurely, suggesting an American plumber.

BARGERON

It is right interesting to watch him go down while his Finnish colleagues turn a wheel to keep him supplied with air but hardly worth waiting 16 hours for, particularly when you can see divers in the movies at any time. I think, in fact, that this gentleman has had some movie experience because he always smiles and faces the camera when pictures of him are snapped by the passengers. Indeed, I wouldn't be surprised if the country isn't quite Hollywood conscious since the success of their famous runner, Mr. Nurmi, the "Flying Finn" as our sports writers called him. Incidentally he figures very prominently in the travel literature here.

* * * *

The diver goes down once, a big, clumsy, wallowing thing in his paraphernalia, then he comes up for a cigarette (brand unknown) and goes down again. He goes and comes three times before his inspection is complete and then I wonder if the captain is any more assured than he was before. If I was worried about the bottom of my ship I would want to see it myself.

Anyway, we have plenty of time to study the beauty of the harbor and city. It looks like a toyland. The vista is a huge interlacing of small islands and lakes and streams. Old World cathedral spires and the square majesty of the very modern Parliament Building rise on the rocky, jagged promontory that is Helsingfors. Along the shore line, away from the harbor, are the homes of the elite, many of them the residences of foreign diplomats stationed here.

One sees now the symmetrical lines of the university, where I assume there is a youth movement of some kind or another.

* * * *

The visitor is impressed, however, with the placidity of the place. A warm sun bathes it this time of the year and one gets the impression from the number of people out-of-doors, on and near the water, that the population is bent upon getting the full benefit of it while it lasts. A fleeting observation is that the men, the opposite of our way at home, do not care whether they wear bathing suits or not. Those that are worn are designed to show man in all of his masculine splendor.

We see our first women street car conductors here, Aleck. I have been looking intently for a Virginian among them, having in mind that so many Virginians operate our cars in Washington.

Coming from a country, Aleck, where one is accosted in every block by a panhandler or crippled pencil vendor, I am very much impressed by the total absence of beggars both here and in Copenhagen. In the morning here the market place is a beehive of activity with bent old men and women vending their vegetables, their milk and their fish. Promptly at 12 o'clock they take their baskets and vamoose and then the place is scoured with a fire hose.

* * * *

I should like so much, Aleck, to be the national planner of this country. Life seems so simple that I imagine a planner could hold his planning down to a six-hour day, not work 16 or 18 hours as our planners say they do. Then of nights the planner could sit in the reflection of the Arctic sun with its myriad of colors and tints that challenge the painter's brush, and contemplate his handiwork.

But not knowing the language, if I were to start anything they would only laugh at me and say "the crazy American." When as a matter of fact I am very serious in my desire.

Liberal Trend Seen In New Brazil Laws

Centralization of Government and Greater Regard for Interests of Urban Working Classes Provided in New Constitution.

By Lothrop Stoddard.

THE enthusiastic reception accorded the giant Sikorsky air liner, the Brazilian Clipper, on its arrival at Rio de Janeiro, serves to focus attention upon Brazil, our gigantic neighbor to the southward. The importance of our business relations with Brazil is coming to be recognized by most Americans. The volume of this branch of our foreign trade is obviously dependent upon Brazilian prosperity and stability. Of late years, Brazil has been neither prosperous nor stable. Hence, the direction of her economic and political evolution is, for us, of very practical concern.

Brazil is truly a giant among the nations. We may appreciate its huge size when we realize that its area is well over 3,000,000 square miles. Brazil is thus larger than the continental United States, and is only slightly smaller than our total area with Alaska thrown in for good measure. Fully half of the South American continent is under the Brazilian flag.

Yet though Brazil is a giant, it is a sprawling giant, still in the awkward stage of adolescent youth. Though it already contains nearly 40,000,000 people, this population is mainly concentrated on or near the seaboard. The vast interior is for the most part not merely unpeopled, but largely unexplored. Brazil thus contains vast possibilities for future growth.

Its history has been strikingly different from that of the other Latin-American nations. To begin with, Brazil was colonized by Portugal, whereas the rest of Latin America was colonized by Spain. Thus the marked distinctions between the two Iberian peoples were transferred to the New World and set Brazil in a class by herself. Though all of Latin America eventually became independent of the Iberian motherlands, the processes of emancipation were singularly unlike. Spanish America freed itself only at the cost of a long and bloody struggle, followed by an even longer cycle of revolutionary anarchy during which Spanish America broke up into a number of independent republics.

Separation From Portugal Comparatively Bloodless.

IN Brazil, on the contrary, separation from Portugal was an almost bloodless affair. Furthermore, the country retained its political unity. Lastly, Brazil retained the monarchical principle, transforming itself from a Portuguese colony into an empire governed by a branch of the Portuguese royal House of Braganza. Thus, while Spanish America tore itself to pieces in endless revolutions at the hands of military dictators, Brazil evolved peacefully under a benevolent monarch and a fairly enlightened aristocracy.

The empire came to an end in the year 1889, when a revolution deposed the venerable Emperor Dom Pedro and proclaimed a republic. Almost simultaneously, slavery had been abolished. These two events marked the beginning of a radically new phase of Brazilian history.

The new Brazilian republic was unlike our own. It was a federation of states much looser than that established by our revolutionary forefathers. In the Brazilian constitution of 1891, the principle of state rights was legalized to a degree that would have delighted John C. Calhoun. Each Brazilian state was, internally, almost a law unto itself, and since state patriotism has remained strong, Brazilian politics have retained a sectional flavor reminiscent of American politics before our Civil War.

Indeed, sectionalism in Brazil is based upon stubborn realities, because the range of differences between various parts of the country is greater than anything we know here. The fundamental contrast is between north and south; though, because Brazil lies in the antipodes, its north is tropical, whereas its southern portion has a temperate climate not unlike that of our South. Climatic differences are emphasized by differences of race. Tropical Brazil has a very large Negro population, and since racial distinctions have not been maintained there, the entire population of northern Brazil is today pretty well impregnated with African blood.

The Southern States, on the contrary, had relatively few Negroes, while during the past half-century they received a tremendous influx of European immigrants, largely Italians and Germans, who have given southern Brazil an essentially white population. These energetic immigrant stocks have made southern Brazil the most prosperous and progressive part of the federation. The southern metropolis is the great city of Sao Paulo, the capital of a State with the same name. At times Sao Paulo has dominated the political life of the republic. In fact, it was largely jealousy of "Paulists" ascendancy which precipitated the revolution of 1930 and thereby ushered in a cycle of grave disorders from which Brazil is only now emerging.

Political History Not Edifying One.

THE political history of Brazil under the republic has not been an especially edifying one. The overthrow of the empire did not result in the establishment of democratic self-government. Most of the country remained feudal, not to say patriarchal, in character. Power was in the hands of a few great families. The mass of the population, especially the newly enfranchised Negroes, either did not vote at all or voted as they were told. Politics were thus a matter, not of principles, but of personalities, while both the state and federal governments were shot through with favoritism and corruption.

Even before 1930, Brazil had suffered from a number of revolutionary disturbances. The great economic depression which engulfed the world at that time and which hit Brazil with especial severity, however, both complicated and envenomed sectional and personal feuds. The upheaval of 1930 was, in fact, the most intense that the country ever had experienced. It threatened the federation with disruption and effectively suspended constitutional government. Getulio Vargas, leader of the victorious revolutionists, made himself a dictator in the traditional Spanish-American manner. Wholesale imprisonment of political opponents, arbitrary decress and censorship of the press became the order of the day.

Yet this authoritarian regime is now apparently to be terminated. A new constitution has been framed which aims to reestablish Brazil's political life upon a sounder basis. This document differs notably from the original republican constitution of 1891. First of all, it is more centralistic in nature. The extreme federalism which hitherto characterized Brazil is curtailed. State rights and privileges are relatively subordinated to federal authority, while national interests take precedence in greater measure over state or regional considerations. Furthermore, women are given the vote—a rather startling innovation, considering the backwardness, illiteracy and political inexperience of the Brazilian masses.

The new constitution likewise contains social provisions looking to greater regard for the interests of the poorer peasantry and the urban working classes. Alongside these rather socialistic trends we should note a partial abandonment of one of Brazil's traditional policies — unrestricted immigration. Hitherto, Brazil has welcomed newcomers regardless of numbers or racial origin. Japanese immigrants, for instance, have been hospitably received and today form large agricultural colonies in several States. The accepted theory was literally that of the melting pot—the fusing of all ethnic strains into a new amalgam distinctively Brazilian in character.

Of late years, however, this theory has been increasingly discredited. The immigrant Japanese, for example, have remained clannishly aloof, while other immigrant elements have not fused with anything like the rapidity that had been expected. Racial and sectional differences have increased to a point that, in the eyes of many patriotic Brazilians, threatened the disruption of national unity.

The revolutionary regime in power since 1930 has therefore deemed its primary task to be not merely the creation of a stronger instrument of government, but likewise the forging of a more coherent national spirit. To further these basic ends, the new constitution is specifically designed.

How the new constitution will work in practice should soon be demonstrated with the election of a constitutional president, slated for the near future. That, under the new regime, Brazil may enter a brighter and more prosperous phase is assuredly the wish of Americans, to whom a stable, progressive Brazil would mean much in many ways.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

The President and Upton Sinclair.

("President Roosevelt said he would receive Mr. Sinclair if he would not talk politics."—News Item).

Mr. Sinclair:
Good morning, Mister President,
And how are you today?

The President:
Until you came here, Upton, I
Was feeling quite okay.

Mr. Sinclair:
I thought I'd make a little call
To talk of this and that;
For I'm like you, if I may boast,
A modern Democrat.

The President:
Hush, Upton! Hush, I prithee, hush!
I wish you wouldn't shout;
There are so many other things
I wish you'd talk about.

Mr. Sinclair:
The New Deal's down my alley, Frank,
I'm with you to a "T"—
And what I'm wondering just now
Is whether you're with me.

The President:
Desist! I wish you wouldn't talk
Of politics at all;
It's lovely weather, isn't it,
We're having here this fall?

Mr. Sinclair:
I've watched what you've been doing, Frank,
And I would string with you;
Together we'll go marching as
We make this world anew.

The President:
The nip of autumn's in the air,
And soon the leaves will turn;
How are you? . . . How are all the folks?
I'd really like to learn.

Mr. Sinclair:
The time is ripe for changing things;
Our forefathers were wrong . . .
For your experiments, my boy,
I'm very, very strong.

The President:
The goldenrod is blooming now
In all the fields . . . Kerchoo!—
My wife is feeling pretty well,
And how are things with you?

Mr. Sinclair:
This country must be reshaped and
I think the time is ripe;
Now as a Democrat don't you
Think I am just the type?

The President:
The days are growing shorter, yes,
And nightfall comes too soon;
The days are always shorter in September than in June.

Mr. Sinclair:
Traditions are the bunk, I think,
There's only one way out:
Take over nearly everything
And throw the owners out.

The President:
Yes, yes, the nights are cooler, too,
Exactly as you say;
I think this time of year is much
Like very early May.

Mr. Sinclair:
I guess I'd best be going now,
It's getting late, and so
I'm hoping, Franklin, that you will Not mind much if I go.

The President:
Oh, pray don't hurry! Here's your hat,
Good-by, and call again!
It's clouding up and maybe we Will get a little rain.

Wants the Low-Down.

Donald R. Richberg cites figures and says that more than 5,000,000 more workers have been employed in the last year, that wages have gone up 37 per cent, that corporate profits have soared 32 per cent and that business improvement is marked in all lines.

* * * *

"Boy," said Elmer Twitchell, the well known business man this morning, "call up Mr. Richberg's office and see how I'm doing."

* * * *

It seems only yesterday that Upton Sinclair was the boy wonder of the book world and we were all afraid to eat canned meat because of his book, "The Jungle."

* * * *

The President will not receive Sinclair on a political basis, but will receive him on a social basis. Now remember, boys, no cheating!

An outbreak of colds has swept the camp at Little America. Can it be that the boys have been standing in a draft?

Daily Talk About Books and Authors

Labor Day

Labor Day for me has a humor all its own; it resembles all other days, not in being laborless—the usual significance of Labor Day—but in being filled with continuous work. The motto of Goethe was without haste and without rest. My own life alas, is certainly without rest but is not altogether without haste. A man who writes a daily article is like a man running to catch a train.

In Europe Labor Day means the First of May; in the United States and Canada, Labor Day is the first Monday in September. It was the result of long and continuous effort for its adoption by that organization known as the Knights of Labor; in 1882, 1883, and 1884 they paraded in the streets of New York City on the first Monday in September; and I can remember their urgent agitation to have that day set apart from all others in the year, as a recognition of the dignity and of the rights of labor.

In the year 1884 the Knights of Labor passed a resolution that the first Monday in September should be universally regarded as Labor Day; workmen of all kinds and classifications joined in the movement. The first State of the Union to recognize it legally was Oregon, on February 21, 1887. New York, New Jersey, Colorado followed suit. On June 28, 1894, the U. S. Congress made the first Monday in September a legal holiday throughout the nation; so that this year 1934 celebrates the fortieth anniversary of the national adoption of Labor Day.

Except in the District of Columbia and for Federal workers, the separate States had to pass further laws to complete the necessary steps for the holiday. By 1928 every State and territory had enacted the necessary legislation except the Philippines and Wyoming. Why Wyoming, I wonder?

The Philippines follow the order of the Old World and have their Labor Day on May 1.

Most of the provinces of Canada celebrate the September Labor Day by law; in the other it requires a proclamation by the Governor.

Highway Detour Finds Friend at Last—in Virginia

Williamsburg, Va., Sept. 2 (AP).—Ashton Dovell, Williamsburg attorney and floor leader of the House of Delegates in the Virginia General Assembly, said today he probably is the only person in Virginia who ever benefited from a highway department detour.

Explaining, humorously, Delegate Dovell said:

"Repair to the Duke of Gloucester street, which necessitated a detour for through traffic, sent crowds of automobiles past my office. Now most people would think that automobiles in a continual passing stream would be a disagreeable feature, but I found on the contrary that they were exceedingly pleasent.

"Soon after the detour was created I began getting cards from all over the State, and some from other States, from people who had passed the office building and had seen my sign there. I feel that the detour has made me many new friends and for that reason I am most thankful to Highway Commissioner Henry G. Shirley."

Mr. Dovell's office, built by the Williamsburg Restoration, is a small brick building of Colonial style and is one of the minor landmarks in the newly created reconstruction project.

Wolf Survives Wounds; Ignorant of Danger

By Robert Quillen.

Some weeks ago a lay preacher in the mountains of North Carolina won unexpected fame by inviting and surviving the bite of a rattlesnake.

His religion convinced him that nothing could do him harm because of his faith in the Lord. He was astonished and perhaps terrified when the snake struck his arm, but his faith still held. The Lord had permitted the snake to strike him, but would not permit the poison to kill him.

In that faith he lived. The poison acted as it always does; the twice-punctured arm swelled until the skin burst; but the preacher refused all cures except the power of the Lord and quit his bed to preach on the following Sunday.

The story was printed everywhere; and doubtless many simple folk, ignorant of rattlesnakes, believed the Lord had performed a miracle to reward a disciple's faith.

To combat this belief, a celebrated authority told the press that the bite of the rattlesnake is not fatal in 85 per cent of the cases, with or without faith.

The statement, as quoted, was misleading.

Any person who has lived in rattlesnake country, and knows the effect of the snake's poison by experience or observation, knows also that the effect depends on four physical factors: the age and condition of the victim; the size of the snake, which determines the quantity of its venom; whether the snake has recently struck and thus partially emptied its poison sacs and whether the fangs strike true and deep.

Ordinarily, people recover because they are very strong or because they get little of the venom.

The preacher recovered for another reason, also, and thereby taught a great lesson.

His faith did much to save him. He believed he would recover and thus escaped the handicap of fear.

It takes much to kill a man who refuses to die; a very little kills those men who can be scared to death.

Mr. Shirley Married Here To Miss Levy

Bridal Pair Will Live Here After Wedding Tour in North.

John J. Wolfe Weds Mrs. Parran, of Upper Marlboro, Md.

As each new day arrives accompanied by the ever increasing list of engagements and weddings, society becomes more and more convinced that June is surrendering its faithful followers to the tawny month of September.

The Douglas Methodist Episcopal Church was the scene of a pretty wedding Saturday evening when Miss Ruth E. Levy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur H. Levy, became the bride of Mr. J. Dallas Shirley, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Shirley.

The altar and choir loft were banked, with early autumn blossoms, palms and ferns. The Rev. A. H. McKinley, of Baltimore, assisted by the Rev. Clarence Cockran performed the ceremony at 8 o'clock.

Mr. Arthur E. Levy gave his sister in marriage. She wore a becoming gown of heavy white satin, made with a gracefully draped cowl neckline and brief cape sleeves. The long flaring skirt terminated in a fan-shaped train. She had on long kid gloves. Her veil of white maline was caught into a cap of lace which was held in place by clusters of orange blossoms. The bride carried a bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley.

Mrs. Arthur Mulloy, Matron.

Mrs. Arthur Mulloy, jr., attended her sister as matron of honor. She was wearing a gown of peach lace made on princess lines with a cape effect at the shoulders. On her head she wore a wreath of peach-colored blossoms and she carried a bouquet of talisman roses.

Mrs. M. Snelling and Mrs. Everett R. Johnson were the bridesmaids. They wore gowns of turquoise blue lace made on lines similar to that worn by Mrs. Mulloy. Their bouquets were of pink roses. Little Miss Lena Jiacinto and Miss Elizabeth Cooper were the junior bridesmaids. The former wore a frock of peach taffeta and a bandeau to match and the latter had on a frock of turquoise blue taffeta with a matching headband. They both carried baskets of rose petals.

Mr. Edward Norcio attended Mr. Shirley as best man, and the ushers were Mr. Robert Carrico, Mr. James Orme, 3d, Mr. Andrew Deming and Mr. Everett Johnson.

Following the ceremony there was a reception at the home of the bride. The drawing rooms were decorated with garden flowers. The young couple were assisted in receiving by Mrs. Levy, who was wearing a gown of orchid lace with matching slippers and a corsage of orchids, and Mrs. Shirley, who had on a gown of black lace and a shoulder corsage of gardenias.

Later Mr. and Mrs. Shirley left on a motor trip through the North, the latter wearing a smart traveling ensemble of brown crepe with a tailored brown felt hat. Upon their return they will make their home in Washington.

After October 1 Mr. and Mrs. Wolfe will make their home at 1705 Surrey Lana, in Foxhall Village. Trotteur Coat Answers Fall Need Thriftily

By Ruth Anne Davis.

Labor Day fulfills its name in some families. After the housewife has seen her husband depart at break of day for a fishing trip, and packed the children's lunch for that last picnic, she'll take herself to the trunk room and unpack all last winter's clothes.

Her inventory may be discouraging or encouraging, depending on whether Junior has outgrown his school clothes and how well the moths have fared on the woolens. By the middle of the afternoon she will have a pretty good idea of what has to be bought, and what made over, and what sent to the country cousins.

If she decides, after looking over her own leftovers, that she'll simply have to have a winter coat, after all, and, of course, a bag and a hat to go with it, she'll begin to feel as badly as she fears the budget will look. So here comes some glad tidings!

The coats, called trotteur, are swagger style in a beautiful shade of golden brown lapin. A tweedy lining is bordered with a bright plaid, and a scarf matches this. And then there are little Rembrandt berets topped off with a jaunty feather to match the scarf. A bag completes the outfit. It's not just a bag that's thrown in, it's a bag that's designed and suited to any smart outfit, and any occasion. Besides a satin lining it boasts two roomy pockets, and a suede case for a powder puff.

The price of the complete set is small enough to make you wonder!

Chenille Sweater Suits.

The same store has some chenille sweater suits in tweedy mixtures or solid colors. These have striped sweaters, kerchief scarfs and plain skirts.

Stop by tomorrow and see them. If one style doesn't suit, another will. And remember when chill fall winds begin their game of nip and tuck, a soft, wooly, conservative suit of this kind will both feel and look mighty good. Price $10.95.

New Deck for a New Deal.

Gold-edge playing cards in a checked tulip design are having a new deal in lots of homes. Summer bridge parties have played havoc with decks in general, and fingers damp from cool highballs have taken their toll. Since these decks sell two for 50 cents, shoppers find it a small burden to the budget to stock up anew.

Individual Trays.

Little individual cocktail trays in lightweight Florentine wear are sending an urgent call to all who have 25 cents to invest in such conveniences.

These come in a variety of designs and a multitude of colors. They're guaranteed water and alcohol proof.

If a woman's worldly goods are gauged by her wardrobe, and a man's from the car he drives, then surely Junior's is from his school equipment. If he sits down at his desk and spreads out a new pencil box like those featured in a downtown store he'll be king of his class.

One of these boxes sets the parent back just $1, but such boxes as they are! Besides an upper tray they have three drawers, each crammed with pencils, crayons, paints, erasers, rules and all the other things school demands.

Oriental bouquet is the name of some new bath crystals that come in a tall glass jar, that resembles a summer sunrise with blue and rose and yellow streaking one into the other. Just a sprinkling of the fine power-like crystals into a tub of water transforms it instantly into a perfumed bath.

More somber but equally as fragrant are the other scents, pineneedle and chypre.

Hangers for Travelers.

"Antiques" Stay That Way.

Ivory-colored pottery pieces with an antique finish are selling like hot cakes. Some time ago an "antiquated" pottery appeared on the market and found its share of purchasers, who quickly found the antique finish washing off. This new pottery has the finish under the glace so that it will last as long as the pottery.

There are fruit bowls, urns, vases and candlesticks, all gracefully designed.

New Martini Shakers.

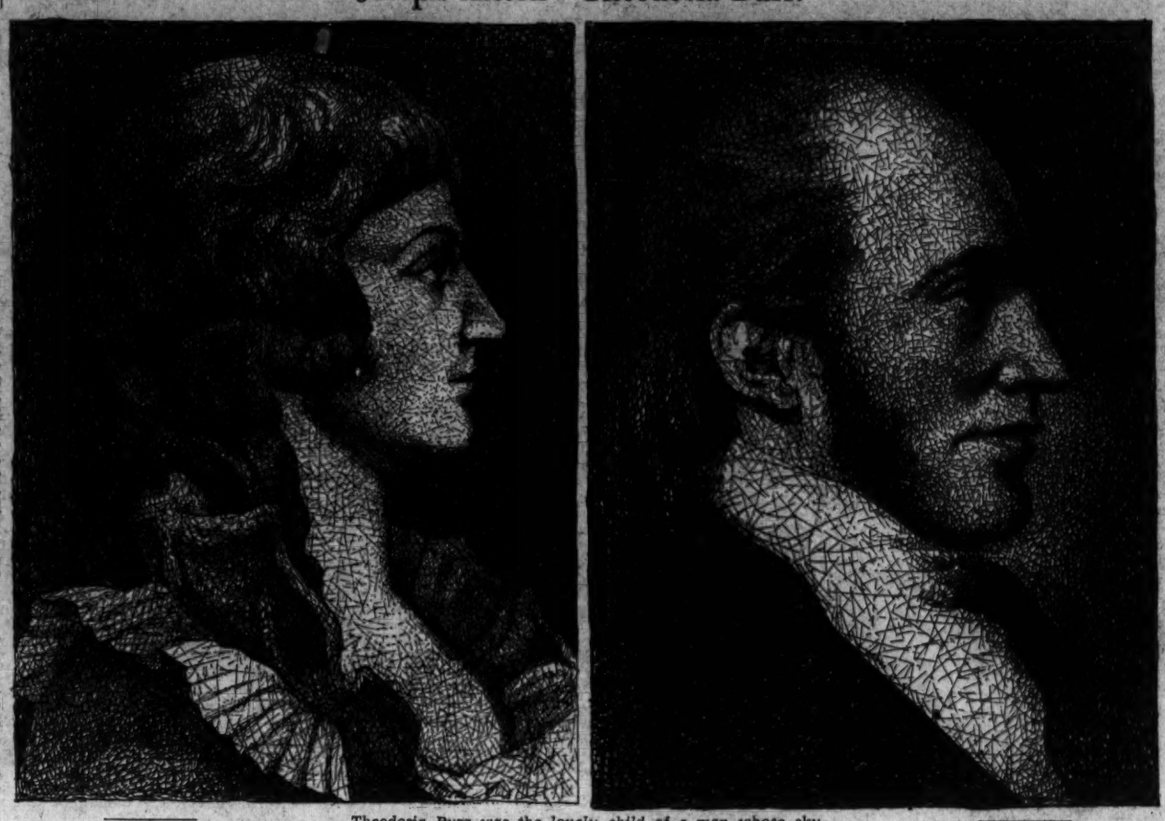
Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

Joseph Alston—Theodosia Burr.



Theodosia Burr was the lovely child of a man whose skyrocket career startled young America—Aaron Burr. Her life was as strange. As a beautiful young wife she set sail one day from Charleston Harbor—neither she nor the boat were heard of again.

Happily Wed After Many Sorrows, Young Wife Vanished at Sea.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

THE disappearance at sea of Theodosia Burr Alston, a mystery never solved, her erratic father's career and her short-lived romance with Joseph Alston, a cavalier of South Carolina, have made the story of Theodosia Burr, "the first gentlewoman of America," surpassing in its vivid tragedy and romance, joy and sorrow.

Tradition has preserved details of her dark beauty, her grace, her cultured mind and her devotion to her distinguished father, Aaron Burr, through the stormy days of his life. Less is known of her romance with her young suitor, Joseph Alston, who, winning her hand at last, found his happiness blasted shortly after their marriage by her loss at sea while en route from Charleston, S. C., to visit her father in New York.

The most casual historian knows the story of Aaron Burr, the man who "went up like a skyrocket and came down like a stick." Aaron Burr touched the hem of greatness more than is possible for most men: missed being President by the one vote that made Thomas Jefferson the Chief Executive by a Constitutional vote of the House of Representatives; served as Vice President, and made an admirable presiding officer of the Senate; dreamed of empire in the Southwest; was tried for treason and acquitted; agonized over the mysterious disappearance of his beautiful Theodosia and died, dishonored and forgotten, with the shadow on his soul of the legal assassination of Alexander Hamilton, the beloved young friend of George Washington.

Had Good Ancestry.

No man of his time had more distinguished lineage than Aaron Burr. The son of the President of Princeton University and a grandson of Jonathan Edwards, a generalissimo of the church militant, fortune smiled on him from birth.

Aaron Burr was by no means indifferent to the fairer sex. His path was strewn with the roses of dalliance until he met the fair and lovely Theodosia Prevost, widow of Maj. Prevost, a British army officer, a resident of Hackensack, N. J. This was during the American Revolution.

The romance grew during the war and after peace came, Burr pushed his suit more successfully. On July 2, 1782, Col. Burr became the second husband of Mme. Prevost. They went to live in Albany, N. Y., where Col. Burr began the practice of law. A year later Theodosia was born.

Political Career Begins.

Then came law business in New York and finally he became Senator of New York in the Congress then sitting in Philadelphia. Week-ends he passed in New York with little Theodosia always by his side, his pet and his darling. But shadows were gathering about the household. Mme. Prevost's health was failing. In 1794, she died, leaving a disconsolate widower, two sons and Theodosia then in her eleventh year.

Theodosia became the head of her father's household and did much to solace him in his sorrow. As she grew into her teens her beauty was more and more apparent and after a time suitors flocked to the Burr home. But she was adamant to their appeals. Her heart was engrossed in the career of her father. With smiling eyes she saw him nominated for the Presidency and felt with him the crushing blow of disappointment when he lost by one vote the glittering prize after which so many men have struggled in vain.

She was with him, too, in that dark hour when he slew Alexander Hamilton in a duel and came full of horror at his own deed to tell her of it. Pariah now, she walked still by his side in loveliness and in love. Discredited at the end of his term as Vice President by that mad act, he retired from politics and like Macbeth he could not wipe out the stain of blood.

In Washington she met one day a courtly Southern beaux, Joseph Alston, a scion of a historic South Carolina family with the rich pious blood of the Huguenots flowing through its sons. Where other suitors had failed Joseph Alston won.

Aaron Burr, pleased that his beloved child had found a worthy mate, gave his glad consent. He knew it meant a separation, she must live in Charleston and he was returning to New York. But he was willing to sacrifice for the sake of one who had made so many sacrifes for him.

Dreams of an Empire.

So they were wed and they should have lived happily for ever after. Alas, the fates decreed differently. Joseph Alston was rising high in political favor, their Charleston home was a center of hospitality and soon there came young Aaron Burr Alston to brighten their lives.

Aaron Burr was delighted when he learned of the appearance of his grandson. In 1802 he went to Charleston to call on the young man. For a time his gay spirits seemed to revive.

But in 1804 came the duel with Hamilton. Close upon its heels in 1805, 1806 and 1807 was his wild scheme of empire in the Southwest, which resulted in his arrest on a charge of treason, imprisonment in the Richmond penitentiary, trial and acquittal. He was supported the while by his faithful daughter's unfailing devotion.

In 1808, Burr went to Europe, probably with the idea of gaining European support for those dreams of empire which he never quite relinquished. Europe was cold to his appeal, however, and he was shunted from one country to another. In 1812 came the sad news of the death of his adored grandson, Aaron Burr Alston. He sailed for home in order to comfort his daughter. This was in June.

His refuge in New York was a poorly furnished room where he lived almost as though he were a hermit. When news came to Theodosia Burr of his condition she was greatly worried and forgot her grief for her son for a time in order to try to help her father.

Finally, on January 1, 1813, she set sail from Charleston Harbor for New York in a pilot boat. She never was heard from again. What happened to the boat and its beautiful passenger is one of the mysteries of the American seas.

The Sea Keeps Secret.

The frantic husband and father tried for months to find some trace of the lost ship and Theodosia. Rumors of capture by pirates, shipwreck, mutiny abroad and all passengers slain came to them, but the truth never has been heard of what really happened.

The story of the rest of Burr's life is one of sorrow, grief and tragedy. Embittered by his sorrows, his hand was against that of every man's. He never recovered from the shock although he lived to the ripe old age of 80 years. Three years before his death he married Eliza Jumel, a rich New York widow. Their married life lasted only three months, when they separated. The cause, it was said, was that Burr lost most of her money in speculation and she could not forgive him.

HONEYMOON MOUNTAIN

by Frances Shelley Wees

"WELL, TUBBY and Bryn," Madeline replied, "are especially . . . especially attractive."

"Everybody mightn't think so," Deborah said in a low voice.

"You can take my word for it, honey, they do."

Deborah considered. "Tubby wouldn't marry just anybody," she said comfortingly.

"I don't mean just anybody. But I can think of half a dozen girls in our own crowd who could make quite a dent in him, if they set about doing it. And there's one in particular."

"Pilar?"

"Pilar."

"What's she like?" Deborah asked curiously.

"Pilar Is Beautiful."

She's one of these hot-headed stamping beauties, if you know what I mean. Pilar isn't much more Spanish than I am, although she has a Spanish name and a Spanish look, which she takes very good care to intensify. Her mother was American, and the mothers all up the line for the last five generations. Pilar has huge flashing black eyes, and smooth black hair . . . and she makes her mouth very red and doesn't use rouge on her cheeks. And she's tall and graceful and buys wonderful clothes, the kind other people can't get by with."

"Is she very beautiful, Madeline?"

"Very. Almost as beautiful as you, honey, only quite, quite different."

"Have she and Tubby known each other long?"

"Years and years."

"Then . . . surely you needn't worry, Madeline. He would have married her long ago if he'd been going to, wouldn't he?"

Madeline hesitated. "No," she said finally. "Something new has just occurred in Pilar's life. She wouldn't have married him until now."

A cold finger touched Deborah's heart; but the touch was so light that it was gone in an instant, and she had forgotten it.

"What can I do, Madeline?"

"Tubby likes me," she said. "We get along beautifully together. If I were sure he didn't love Pilar I'd just simply set about making him love me."

"But could I find out about Pilar? Is that what you want me to do?"

The Conspirators.

"I thought you might ask Bryn. Bryn knows everything about Tubby, just as Tubby knows everything about Bryn. I wouldn't mind asking Bryn myself, but I couldn't expect him not to tell Tubby that I'd asked. He's Tubby's friend before he's mine. But you could lead the conversation around gradually, you know what I mean, and Bryn wouldn't need to know what you wanted to know for. And then you could tell me."

Deborah was silent. Madeline was supposing that she and Bryn had long hours alone, hours when nobody else heard what they said to each other . . .

She looked up. "Do you really love him, Madeline?" she asked softly.

"I'll see what I can do, Madeline."

But of course she couldn't find out from Bryn. After last night she couldn't go to Bryn and begin talking about love.

It was only an hour or two later when she saw her chance to carry out the alternative in her mind. Tubby was sitting alone down by the brook.

"How do you expect me to whittle with you there?" he inquired.

"I don't see what difference it makes, Tubby."

"You're a modest little thing, Deborah. Don't you know that the sun shining on that hair is enough to knock a man's eye out, to say nothing of making him cut a couple of fingers spang off?"

"I'm beginning to think," Deborah said seriously, "that I've got nice hair. I'm getting spoiled about it. Do you like it up here, Tubby?"

"I think it's great. I'm crazy about it."

"Don't you miss all the excitement in the city?"

"Not a twinge of missing do I get."

"Madeline and Sally have been telling me a little about places, and people. Yesterday they told me about Pilar."

Tubby looked up.

"Do you mean to say those women told you about Pilar?"

"Yes. Why not? I was awfully interested."

"Well," he said with a heavy sigh, "women are the funniest things in captivity. I should think that would have been the last name they would have mentioned."

"From the sound of Pilar," she said. I couldn't blame anybody for thinking she was wonderful."

"I suppose she does sound all right," Tubby said dubiously. "But she's no good, Deborah. I'm warning you, in case she ever comes near you. What's been handed to her is hard to take, and it isn't agreeing with her very well."

"Did you hear somebody calling?" Deborah said suddenly. "It sounded like Grandmother. Excuse me, Tubby," and she got up and ran swiftly to the house. Grandmother was not calling, of course; but Deborah knew she couldn't bear to stay with Tubby another second. Her heart felt as if it was breaking.

She sat on her couch for a long time, thinking. Remembering last night . . . Bryn's "Good night, darling." His "Do you like me at all?" His "You are the prettiest thing in the world." But remembering, too, that other girl he had talked about days and days ago. The girl he called his sweetheart.

He Just Pities Me.

The girl he loved . . . she would be Pilar. They all thought Bryn had given her up, forgotten her, for Deborah. They couldn't possibly understand, when they didn't know why Bryn had married.

And his tenderness toward her? His hand over hers, sitting there in the twilight? What was that, then?

Deborah stood before her mirror. The faded gingham dress, the braided hair . . . she looked like some forlorn little orphan youngster who needed someone to love her. Bryn was kind. He was sorry for her. The feeling he had for her was . . . pity.

And just at that moment she heard the sound of Joe's horn, far down the mountain. Three long blasts and two short ones . . . a pause . . . three long notes and two short ones. She raced down the stairs to Grandmother and Madeline, out on the veranda. She caught the sound of Madeline's voice, going steadily on with "Shadows of the Rock." Deborah stopped at the sound of that calm voice and steadied herself. Chin up, she walked out serenely and smiled at Grandmother.

From the orchard Bryn came leisurely down the path. He smiled at Grandmother, too, and dropped down on the step beside Deborah. Gary appeared suddenly, out of Grandmother's range of vision. Simon's footsteps came lightly down the stairs. Tubby's whistle blew a short triumphant blast on the morning air.

Madeline's voice went on. Bryn sauntered around the corner toward Gary.

A low humming sound made itself felt on the air. The shinning top of a motor car appeared along outside the wall, swung in toward the gates. Gary started down the drive.

"It looks as if we had guests," Grandmother said, interrupting Madeline.

"It's probably another plumber," Madeline said languidly.

Gary had reached the gates. After a moment's colloquy with the driver of the car he swung them wide and the long blue car came on through. Deborah put a slow hand to her throat.

But it was not Stuart Graham driving; it was a woman . . . a girl . . . in a bright red silk beret, and a red jacket. The car stopped opposite the end of the veranda. The girl got out, and Deborah knew her. She was tall and very slim, with a long oval face and a very red mouth. Deborah and Madeline went down the steps.

"It's Pilar," Madeline said under her breath, and Deborah nodded.

"Ah, Madeline!" Pilar said, in a voice that made a tune. "And this," she went on carressingly, "this will be little Deborah. My child, you are adorable."

BLACKIE BEAR

By D. SAM COX

Grandma Bear's First Sandwich

There was some talk at the cornshucking last night about getting up a hunting party to look for the "Strange Animal," just as they all looked for Blackie Bear for all those days, some time ago, as you will remember, but they didn't decide on anything. Anyway, if they should start up another hunt, there will be plenty of time for us to go somewhere else and see what is going on, before they catch Blackie, and so we will leave them for a while, and look in on the folks at Mountain House.

Already it has got pretty cool in the mountains, and they are having nice red fires in the fireplace every night. Some nights, after they have had a big dinner in the middle of the day, Bettie doesn't set the table, or even cook supper—they just roast potatoes and chestnuts or peanuts in the ashes, and if anyone is especially hungry Bettie will let him broil a slice or two of bacon on the coals, and make him a sandwich. That's the sort of supper they were having that night. Grandma Bear said she wasn't hungry, and so she sat back in her rocking-chair and knitted on a sweater for Jenny; but when Jenny had made a nice hot sandwich and offered it to her, just to be polite, she was awfully surprised to see that Grandma had changed her mind, and took the sandwich. So Jenny had to fix another one for herself.

"This reminds me of the first sandwich I ever saw," Grandma said, as she laid down her knitting and moved a little closer to the fire. "I never did tell you children that when I was a lot smaller than you, somebody caught my mother one day when we were out in the woods together, and sent her away somewhere.

"They caught me, too, but they took me home with them and they were just nice enough to me, and gave me lots to eat and a mighty good bed. They had some cats and dogs, too, and we all played together and got along just as well as if we had all been dogs or bears. We were all nothing but children, and I reckon we didn't know whether we really were bears or dogs or cats. I stayed in the house a good deal of the time, and went just where I pleased.

"There were two children in the house, and when they began going to school their mother would fix up nice lunches for them, and she always made some sandwiches with chicken or bacon or some other nice meat in them. One morning she dropped one on the floor, and she told me I might have it. It had bacon in it, just like this one, and it was mighty good. After that, I would grab one sometimes when she wasn't looking, but, just as it always happens when folks do bad things, it got me into trouble, and I just about lost my liking for sandwiches for a long time. She knew that I got the ones that she missed, and she knew how to make me let them alone.

"One day she fixed up a plate of them and left them on the table and went into the bedroom. I just couldn't keep my hands out of that plate, and I grabbed a nice thick one and scooted out behind the house and bit out a big bite. I began to chew it right fast, and —Oo-ee! Soap and red pepper! There never was a worse dose, and I made an awful splutter to get it out of my mouth. And then I heard somebody laughing, and when I turned around, there was my mistress laughing worse than Billie Possum. No, she never had any more trouble about her sandwiches."

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Ringworm or Athlete's Foot.

Ringworm is one of the most widespread skin diseases. It occurs with great frequency on the hands and feet, and in the later situation is sometimes referred to as athlete's foot. There has been a marked increase of the infection in this country in recent years. Some authorities state that more than 50 per cent of our adult population is affected.

When people walk in their bare feet there is a possible contact with ringworm spores from infected floors, particularly at public swimming beaches, around open and enclosed swimming pools and country club locker rooms, and in gymnasiums and other common centers where barefoot travel is in vogue.

The disease usually manifests itself betwen the toes, and is characterized by marked softening and peeling of the skin in this area. The infection may be so slight that the patient is really unaware of its existence, assuming that the itching is the effect of normal perspiration. In more advanced cases there is considerable swelling and the toes may look inflamed and be covered with tiny blisters. Intense itching is nearly always present.

Scores of drugs have been advocated for the treatment of ringworm. The plan of management which is most successful in one case may fail utterly in another. If the parts are red and inflamed it is usually best at the outset to use boric acid dressings. Magnesium sulphate and potasium permanganate are also recommended. As soon as the inflammation subsides an attack must be made upon the parasite itself in order to destroy its power of propagation. Substances that will destroy the fungus are tincture of iodine, resorcin, aniline dyes, &c. X-rays and ultraviolet light have been used with success in some cases.

Simplicity Is the Watchword In Smart World of Fashion

By Amos Parrish.

NEW YORK, Sept. 2.—If there's any word which is being hard worked this season, it certainly is the word "simplicity."

The general silhouette is simple . . . cleared of the exaggerations it had last fall. Widened shoulders have been smoothed down and big puffed sleeves deflated.

Details are simple. They look restrained and refined. Some can even be called delicate. Bows are smaller and ruffs are daintier.

Accessories are simple . . . toned and tuned in with the costume . . . not conspicuous or the first thing you notice in the costume.

The new streamline simplicity has flowing, graceful lines with all details blending into these outlines, not jutting out. There's a long slender look to the coats and dresses . . . and on the coats, the fur is put on to accent this look.

Colors are usually more striking. Outlines are still simple but with a feeling of more snap to them. And details are very apt to have some tricky, pert air to them, even though they still blend in with the outlines.

An example of that last point is found in the dress sketched. It's simple, all right. But the collar is trickily ruffled and finished off with a shoestring tie.

Dresses of the type described are available in Washington in all the better dress shops and department stores.

Capital Kitchen

By Susan Mills.

IT'S amazing—the things you can do with a slice of ham! Here's a particularly good way to serve a thick (about 1½ inches) slice. Try it the next time you have ham.

Ham-Apricot Glace.

Saute a thick slice of ham. When partly cooked, about 20 minutes, add two cups of cooked or canned apricots and juice for each pound of ham. Allow to simmer, basting occasionally, until juice is cooked down to thick syrup and apricots are glazed. Turn ham during the cooking to prevent burning. Serve on a platter surrounded by glazed apricots, garnished with parsley or watercress.

Baked Ham Slices.

Moisten two 1-inch slices of ham and rub with one-third cup of brown sugar and two tablespoons of flour. Cover with milk; bake in moderate oven (375 degrees Fahrenheit) about 40 minutes. On one slice of ham place apple rings cut one-half inch thick. Cover with second slice of ham. Around ham place remaining apple rings, the center holes filled with raisins. Bake until apples are tender, about 15 minutes. Arrange ham on platter, surrounded by apple rings. Serve thickened sauce separately.

Ham and Sweet Potatoes.

Brown a 1-inch slice of ham on both sides in frying pan. Remove to covered dish and place in slow oven to finish cooking.

Boil medium-sized sweet potatoes until they can be pierced with a fork. Peel, quarter, and put in frying pan with ham fat. Sprinkle with brown sugar and a bit of nutmeg.

Cook slowly, turning, until well browned. Remove to a hot platter and serve with the ham.

Modest Girl Still Queen Of Hearts

Shock-Proof Moderns Get Praise as Playmates, But Not Wives.

By the Countess de Lormay.

IN France much is said about the freedom of the American girl. The French think it strange that in America the young girl has so much freedom while single, yet the moment she marries must settle down, not go with other men or have love affairs. In France, it is just the other way round. The young girl must not go with men nor have love affairs nor romances. Her marriage is made for her by her parents and relatives. Not until she is married does she have any freedom her life begins then * * * and not until then

In America the young girl used to be restricted. That system is now called old-fashioned. Has the girl, herself, really changed or does she think the men have changed and is she trying to live up to their expectations? How do men really feel about it—do they prefer the old-fashioned or the modern girl?

Modesty Preferred.

Pierre Louis Henri de Montfermeil, eldest son of a cadet branch of a distinguished family of the old French nobility, has very conservative ideas. He told me:

"A young girl should be a young girl—a jeune fille. It is unbecoming in a girl to run around with men. She should be innocent and pure. No man wants to marry a girl who has become in any way familiar with boys and men. A girl who converses alone with a man inevitably learns about relations between the sexes, gets sophisticated ideas of marriage. Inevitably, the conversation between a young girl and a young man turns to intimate subjects, the natural facts of life which intrigue youth. That sort of conversation is unseemly in an unmarried girl. She should be reserved, innocent and inexperienced when she goes to the altar."

The Marquis Paul Richard de Gallifet, whose mother is an American, was visiting in Washington last year. His aunt had arranged for him to meet many Americans.

"Do you know what I did on the night of a big party?" he said to me. "I just didn't go! I made a date with a sweet girl whom I had met through a business associate. She was not rich, she was not of a distinguished family. But she was modest, appealing and made me feel that I wanted to go out with her. I can't bear to have women thrust themselves at me or be thrust upon me. I think the mistake many girls make is to be too eager to call attention to themselves.

Exploited by Mothers.

"I believe the mistake of many mothers is their obvious efforts to exploit their daughters. I run a mile when I think a girl is trying to force herself on me . . . a mile in the opposite direction, of course. I can run that mile almost as quickly as on a bobsled (he is a bobsled champion at Chamonix) when I think some charming girl is keeping aloof . . . in her direction this time! If girls only knew that to keep a man guessing, to keep him unsure and wondering, hold his interest, how many less heart aches there would be! I am for the old-fashioned girl 100 per cent."

What, then, do American men think of the modern versus the old-fashioned girl?

Recently I was on a cruising party off the coast of Florida, aboard young Charles Cranford's yacht. This wealthy 6-foot, bronzed, young giant of a blond is the hope in many an aspiring maternal heart. He is very modern himself, a more or less confirmed bachelor. His answer to my question regarding the old-fashioned and the modern girl surprised me.

"If I ever find a really old-fashioned girl," he said, "who isn't a downright prude, I'd marry her. By that I mean, a girl who drinks only a little, who smokes only a little, who talks very little, because I can stand a lot of being listened to. She shouldn't swear, even mildly, for that is unbecoming to a pretty mouth. As for repeating risque jokes, there is nothing quite so degrading or disillusioning.

False Shyness.

"I've met girls whose faces have been Madonnas for purity, whose eyes have had a degree of shyness that drew me to them hopefully. But it proved only a front. They were as hard as steel * * * liquor-guzzlers, unmoral, shock-proof. You know a girl can be old-fashioned and still be human. Being old-fashioned doesn't mean being narrow-minded, having a false sense of values. The old-fashioned girl is more real, more alive, more responsive to the opposite sex than any of the modern hard-boiled mamas that are anathema to me and most men. I think some of the flip hard types are fine for amusement. Men often pal around with girls who outdrink them, out-smoke them, and make their jokes seem like Sunday School stories. But that isn't the type they marry. Not ever! So perhaps that explains why I am still a bachelor. The only old-fashioned girl I knew and wanted to marry didn't want to marry me, and I haven't seen another since. * * *"

Gerald Smith, in the diplomatic service, attached to the Pan-American Union, said:

"I can say truthfully I like a happy medium. There are qualities in the old-fashioned girl and there are qualities in the modern girl which are equally desirable. But I believe that most men marry a girl who is, at least, a little bit old-fashioned."

William Holden, musician, whose concerts at the Washington College of Music are very popular, likes the happy medium between the very old-fashioned girl and the extremely modern type.

He said:

"I like a girl who is alert, keeps up with the times and knows what's going on, but still hasn't gone too far . . . who hasn't done things in an extreme way."

Robert Allen Henderson, a young engineer who is working on a project in the West, likes the American freedom as it was before the World War. He said:

"I like girls to have men friends; they learn to understand men before the marriage experience. And men profit from friendships with fine girls. But I don't like brazen hussies! Girls of today don't thrill me. I like to see a girl blush when I threaten to put my arms around her; I like to see her look shy when I threaten to kiss her. Women of today make me feel that there's nothing I can tell them, nothing I can do to impress them. I'm going West, into the country, and maybe I'll be lucky enough to meet some lovely girl, not too sophisticated, yet intelligent, who will respond to my attempts to win her. No, men haven't changed since the days of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson. They like their women sweet and pure."

Charles Edward Stewart, jr., says:

"I am heartily in favor of the freedom of the American girl. I heartily approve. It makes her independent, it stimulates her courage and increases her confidence in her ability to take care of herself. The French girls are very chic and attractive, but under constant surveillance. It is but natural that they develop an inferiority complex foreign to their American cousins and of great assistance to Cupid!"

Do Men Prefer Them Poised or Wide-Eyed?

Beauty Flaws From Summer Call for Cures

Hot Weather Indulgences Make Revamping Necessary.

By Frances Mangum.

IT'S TIME to come out of the summer slump.

Hot weather has an insidious way of making even the best-groomed women neglect their personal appearance. The worst offenders are the matrons. Many of these have sat on their porches and rocked and fanned. With their faces shining and their hair slicked back they contented themselves with a book and a box of chocolates.

But now comes the fall and with it the round of parties, dances, and formal dinners. Henry, who has kept his peace for months, wears a worried look as he watches his wife "give in" to carelessness.

She'll see that a new coiffure, a new shade of rouge and lipstick, a few hip reducing exercises will take away the dishmop look and revive her husband's interest.

A pleasant and interesting way to start the renovation is to get out and take a brisk walk in the mornings. It's good for the figure and fine for the race, as it tends to peel off surplus fat and send the blood circulating more quickly throughout the body.

The next step, of course, is the coiffure. The woman with mouse-colored hair might have it tinted. The woman with straight hair might have hers curled. The woman who doesn't know what to do with hers might consult a hairdresser. There's a young one on Connecticut avenue who gives marvelous simple and sensible advice.

Once the hair problem is solved, the woman who is renovating herself should do a little reconnoitering in the cosmetics field. If she's resisted the lure of eye make-up it's time for her to succumb. Matrons who remember the time when it wasn't considered "nice" to use lash or brow darkeners will find if they look around it's used by the most circumspect.

Those in the mature-woman class must guard against overdoing. The cardinal rule of make-up is go lightly. Merely darken the lashes with a thin coating, and apply an infinitesimal bit of shadow on the lid. These bare touches will give lashes new luster and the eyes new depth and expression.

PILLAR TO POST

WHEN Bonnie B. Jones was a little girl in Tuscaloosa, she pored over Longfellow's "Evangeline" with great interest, never dreaming that she would grow up to find romance in the Bayou Teche country, where Evangeline eventually found her lost Gabriel.

* * * *

She is now Mrs. Numa Montet, wife of the Representative from Louisiana, a descendant of the French Acadians. In the dining room of her home in Bethesda is a picture of the moss-hung live oak that is said to mark the spot where Evangeline is buried.

* * * *

Cleveland Dear, another Representative from Louisiana, will soon be enjoying his favorite sport when the duck-hunting season opens. He belongs to the Savant Nouvelles, a club in the middle of a great swamp in the Parish Cameron.

* * * *

Some people, Mr. Dear says, find the scene there a melancholy one, with the wide reaches of quaking sod, grasses, reeds and rushes as far as the eye can see. They shudder at the sight of a sluggish-swimming moccasin and at the eerie noises the birds make as they lift from the marsh in a black cloud at sunrise. But to him the whooping of the cranes, egrets and many other birds, is the sweetest music. And he knows of no greater thrill than to see the sun come out of the great swamp.

Debut of Poet Fills Big Book

Jesse Stuart's Sonnets, 9,842 Lines Long, Due Next Month.

NEW YORK, Sept. 2 (AP).—Poetry straight from the farm and in unprecedented quantity is to be released upon the world October 8.

The poet is Jesse Stuart, a young Kentucky farmer. His book (it is his first) is to be called "Man With a Bull-Tongue Plow." And it will contain, of all things, 703 sonnets and nothing else.

Such a collection of sonnets has not been published at one swoop in years. And probably no dirt farmer ever attempted such an ambitious program, although records on the subject do not exist. Seven hundred and three sonnets contain, the mathematically minded know, 9,842 lines of poetry.

Stuart is, so his publishers say, an "original." He was born in 1907 at Riverton, Ky., and has lived his life on a farm. His book is not solely a dissertation on sunsets and such, it is pointed out, but rather a poetical autobiography which contains also a wealth or characters drawn from the farm, from small-town life and, presumably, from the poet's imagination.

Stuart is living now near Ashland, Ky., and so far as anybody knows intends to continue living there.

Girls Held to Fear More Than Boys

Girls have more fears than do boys, a survey of seventh grade pupils made by investigators at Columbia University has revealed.

The pet fear of the students was snakes. Next came germs, thieves and drunkards.

Asked what they desired most in the world, a majority of the children replied "happiness." The next most desired attribute was wisdom.

The survey showed that short and heavy boys were more superstitious than tall and thin ones.

Glenna Vare Returns to Golf Competition

National Tournament Entry Comes as Surprise to Friends.

By Ware Torrey and Janet Owen.

SURPRISE is general that Mrs. Glenna Collett Vare has filed an entry for the National Golf Tournament. Only a few weeks ago she said definitely that she would not enter.

With the championship only about a month ahead, opening October 1 at Philadelphia, this should be a new spur to hard practice for Maureen Orcutt and Virginia Van Wie. Mrs. Vare has held the National title five times.

There still remains some doubt, however, as to whether Mrs. Vare will finally play in the tournament. Her husband, Edwin H. Vare, jr., has said that it is not all sure whether Mrs. Vare will be "strong enough" to play.

This year's ranking order of feminine golfers will be prophesied a bit by the results of the Curtis Cup matches, September 27, 28, at Washington, D. C. In addition to Mrs. Vare and Miss Orcutt and Miss Van Wie, golfers who have been invited to be on the American team that will meet the English are Mrs. Opal S. Hill, of Kansas City; Mrs. Leona D. Chaney, of Los Angeles; Charlotte Glutting, South Orange, N. J.; Lucille Robinson, Des Moines; Mrs. Aniela Gorczyca Goldthwaithe, Fort Worth, and Marion Miley, of Miami.

Thee squad for the Curtis Cup matches will consist of six players, with alternates.

Most of the members of the British team are expected to stay for the National championship the following week. Miss Van Wie was ranked last year by London experts as the fourth in the world of women golf players, after three Englishwomen—Joyce Wethered, Enid Wilson and Diana Fishwick. Kathleen Gormley, also of England, ranks next after Virginia Van Wie. Wethered, Wilson and Fishwick are all out of the game this season.

The favorite in a somewhat uncertain field is Miss Van Wie, defending champion for the second successive year. Though all of her shots are highly polished, Miss Van Wie is more famous for her near-flawless iron shots.

Tomorrow and Tomorrow and Tomorrow.

THE time will wear away, will wear away,
What was the crescent is the waning moon,
It is September and it will be June,
You were a child but now your gold is gray
And half a cycle is as yesterday.
A chrysalis has come from its cocoon
And to the embryo will breath come soon
And, in her hour, intoxicating May.

Fanned by the rush of time, you now and then
Are startled, by its deep, recurrent sound
Along the tremulously shaken ground,
It must be so with all our dreaming men,
For not a lyric that these watchers pen
But rose, an evening planet, white, profound.

Dark, leafless trees stand tall and gaunt
Against the winter sky;
In tragic nakedness they stretch
Their limbs in suppliant cry.
Their leaves lie huddled on the ground
In vanquished, shriveled heaps;
A torn and ragged harvesting,
A winter wind-storm reaps.
A lonely road runs aimlessly,
About a distant hill,
To lose itself in silver mist
That cloaks the day with chill.

BRAVE old house! Within your crumbling walls
The ghosts of ancient glories walk, and sweep
Their skirts of silk that rustle in the still

Happy in the shining dreams that fill
Your empty halls with silent, splendid song!

Ancient India Responsible For Scanties

In Those Days, Centuries Ago Pajamas Were Worn Continually.

Next High Spot in History of Underthings Is in Aegean Islands.

Scanties—what they were when they were, and their substitutes when they were not—is the subject of six articles, the first of which appears today.

By Irene Hasbrook.

THROUGHOUT history, scanties we have always with us—excepting those regrettable periods when the foundation of feminine apparel disappeared from historical records or when the women of the day regarded them only as the property of those who were not ladies.

In a day when scanties have become as commonplace to the public as napkins, and when in pictured form they daily face every street car rider and every newspaper and magazine reader, the historical implications of very brief "Briefies" and very short "shorts" are perhaps lost. It is more or less retrieved as follows:

Ancient India started the thing. Centuries and centuries before Christ the inhabitants started wearing pajamas. They wore pajamas all the time, night and day, and these pajamas, voluminous and all-concealing as they were, were the embryo of the scant nothings which are the panties of the feminine fashionables of today.

Sophisticated Pajamas.

The voluptuous Orient, they call it, and according to scholars interested in such things the pajamas of the period did something to contribute to the name. They were long and flowing, they were graceful and luxurious—signs of a civilization advanced to the more sophisticated stages. For (to quote a researcher, Robert Cortes Holliday, who has made deep and intensive study of the matter) "those who abstained from folly abstained also from clothes."

The next high spot in the history of panties occurs in the Aegean Islands somewhere around 2000 B. C., when smartly dressed women resembled slightly Miss Mae West. These quite buxom inhabitants wore large bell-shaped skirts (something of the sort appeared at the recent midsummer openings in Paris) and tightly laced jackets. Pictures of the skirts show a stiff and sudden flare that indicates stiff petticoats of the crinoline type were worn under them. It has been surmised such expanse could not have been attained by petticoats alone and consequently must have been aided by some form of panties.

Unscant Scanties.

These scanties were hardly scant. They were probably long, reaching to the ankles or the ground. They must have been wide to have accomplished their purpose of extending the skirt to the fashionable width.

And the bustle fad, or something like it, may have been born in these islands long before Homer sang of Troy. At least some scholars say so.

Wine River Proved Sheik Owned Keys to Paradise

Flowing streams of wine, milk and honey were not a drought-farmer's dream, but a reality, according to this week's issue of the Family Circle Magazine, which tells how Hassan, Shiek-Al-Jabal, in ancient days built a paradise in which such streams actually flowed.

According to the article the wise old sheik fixed up the streams with small conduits, then drugged his subjects and transported them to the beautiful valley of luxurious gardens and palaces to prove he had the power to admit them to paradise.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

Her Fiance Doesn't Know She's Widow; Must She Tell?

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR Miss Haworth — Four years ago I fell in love with a young man in New York. I was living there then. He was from a wealthy society family and his mother, while pleasant to me, made it plain that she had other plans for her son than for him to marry me. I hoped to make her like me in time. So the young man and I became engaged. He too thought his mother would eventually approve of us marrying. My family is as good as her's. My education was as good as her son's. Finally, after months of waiting, we were secretly married. Four days later my husband was killed in an automobile accident.

* * * *

I have never told anyone—not even my own mother—that I was married. I was too proud and too hurt to tell the boy's mother. Besides, I knew her first thought would be that I was trying to come into an inheritance.

* * * *

And I was so wild with grief I found the only way I could keep going was never to mention the man I had lost through a cruel fate. I came back to Washington, determined to devote myself to my work. I thought I could never love anyone again. But now I have found a delightful companion—a man ten years older than I. It seems to mean all the world to him that I have never been seriously in love before. You see, I never got to the point where I could talk casually about my husband. That is a secret locked in my heart.

* * * *

This is what I want to know. I am thinking about marrying the man who has come to mean a great deal to me. If I tell him I have been married before, I know he will be deeply hurt. He will never understand why I did not tell him sooner; at least, why I have never admitted I was wildly in love once before. But supposing I don't tell him. Isn't there a danger he may find out some day through legal records or something? And then, of course, he would never forgive me. Please tell me what I should do.

DOUBTFUL.

DEAR DOUBTFUL: A previous marriage is about the only thing in a woman's past which need be revealed to the man she intends to marry. One quite unromantic reason is that not to do so constitutes grounds for annulment of a subsequent union, according to some statutes. And, in your case, another is to clear the way to greater peace of mind for yourself, without which you will enter this second marriage a somewhat unhappy and abstracted bride.

* * * *

It should not be too hard to make the second man understand the complex and forgivable reasons which led you into this unintentional deceit.

Tell him that the girl you are now, the girl you have become since knowing him, has never been in love before. Tell him that the girl who loved the first man died when he did. And that in never referring to that disaster and grief in your life, you were acting on the simple philisophy of letting the dead past bury its dead.

* * * *

Also, I would give the explanation as a spiritual gift, rather than in apologetic self-defense. Let him feel that his understanding, his friendship and his love have so restored your emotional sanity that now, at last, you can and want to lead him to this grass-covered mound in your heart. The fact that he only, of all the people in the world—even including your mother—is the first to know, should touch him very deeply.

* * * *

And it should, as well, convince him that he has the power to unlock and to possess all the other, lesser secrets of your heart and mind. Tell him, by all means. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

What Today Means

"Virgo."

IF SEPTEMBER 3 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:30 to 11:30 a. m., from 3:30 to 5:30 p. m. and from 8:30 to 10:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:30 to 9:30 a. m., from 12:30 to 2:30 p. m. and from 10:30 until midnight.

The day will be rife with a holiday spirit with the result that only businesses catering to the public appetite and amusement can expect to make money. It might be advisable, should you go to places where there is a likelihood of getting in large crowds, to make up your mind in advance you will let nothing ruffle your temper. You may encounter crude and rude people during the day and it will prove wise to ignore them as well as their antics. You may encounter a friend, who having no responsibilities, either in the way of family or financial matters, may try to tempt you to forget yours. It will pay you to show sufficient strength of character not to allow yourself to be led into a foolish or reckless adventure. Social contacts should prove enjoyable on this date and this should be an excellent one on which to pay "duty" calls. Married couples, as well as those engaged, might prevent dissension occurring if they do not allow social engagements to separate or cause each to go to a different place.

If a woman and September 3 is your natal day, you should receive a lot of attention on this date and enjoy yourself immensely. Financial matters may improve for you greatly through an unexpected source. If you marry be careful you do not do so for money, for that alone can not buy love or happiness. If you select your mate for his real worth, you should be more than compensated by the devotion he will bestow. Work of a routine might prove best for one of your disposition. Positions requiring efficiency in filing, tabulating, or cataloging might prove congenial.

The child born on September 3, just as soon as it is old enough to understand, should be taught to consider the needs and desires of others before its own. This may prevent it developing selfishness, or becoming self-centered.

If a man and September 3 is your birth anniversary, you should prove very successful, providing you do not allow a mercenary spirit to dominate your actions or influence the selection of your friends. If you practice being considerate in your dealings with family and friends, the joy you will experience will more than compensate any trouble it might necessitate.

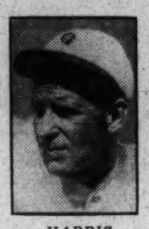
Nats' Late Spurt Routs Yankees, 9 to 3, as Whitehill Goes Route

This Morning

With Shirley L. Povich.

Classic Cracks.

BUCKY HARRIS was tasting for the first time in midsummer of 1926 the bitters of a big-league manager's existence, after leading the Nats to American League pennants in 1924 and 1925. The Boy Wonder manager was in the West with his Washington team, hitting the skids on their way out of the pennant race that year.



HARRIS

Twelve successive games the Nats had lost. Harris' regular pitchers had been knocked out of the box in their last dozen starts. The team wasn't hitting its weight and even the famed double-play combination of Peck-to-Harris-to-Judge was missing fire. Bucky was a sad young man.

The correspondents called on Bucky in a body, to inquire the wherefore of conditions on the team that hadn't won a game in two weeks. Bucky listened, and then gave to baseball one of its most treasured wise-cracks. He smiled and said:

"Well, we can't win 'em all."

Little Andy Kerr's Colgate eleven of 1932 had just concluded the most glorious football campaign in the history of the college. Colgate alumni were easily recognizable by their chest-expansion whenever the subject of football was mentioned.

The Colgate team of that year was unbeaten, untied, and yes, unscored-on. Not a solitary enemy player had crossed Colgate's goal line throughout the season. No other major college in the Nation was able to boast a similar record. Colgate was highly eligible for selection as the team to represent the East in the Rose Bowl Tournament of Roses game.

But Colgate didn't get the invitation. It fell to Pitt, a team that was unbeaten, tied once, and scored against plenty.

Coach Andy Kerr was addressing a Colgate alumni banquet at the close of the season. To them he lauded the Colgate varsity, recounting its triumphs. But the snub of Colgate in the Rose Bowl game invitation still rankled within. This was his parting shot:

"Colgate—Unbeaten, untied, unscored-on and—uninvited."

The club manager was on the warpath. Well-defined signs of dissension had come to his notice and he called a meeting of the players in the locker room before the game. Successive defeats had spurred him to action.

"Listen, youse guys," he told 'em, "I'm the manager of this ball club, and I'm going to run it. The way we're going we'll be lucky to land in the first division. If there's one thing I'm gonna get on this club it's harmony. I'm gonna get harmony if I have to trade off a half dozen of youse guys this month. Savvy?"

Well, the only guy who didn't savvy was a big outfielder, fresh from the Three-Eye League, who was making a pretty good job of it in the majors. Big Outfielder turns to the veteran catcher and whispers:

"Who's this guy Harmony, and what position does he play?"

The late Boze Bulger was farfamed for his wit, but he could enjoy a laugh on himself. Boze it was who made the classic remark after the old New York World folded up and left him jobless, after a 25-year term with the World. "I didn't think it was a permanent job, any way," said Boze.

They took Bulger off the baseball writers' special at the St. Louis terminal and rushed him by ambulance to the hospital for an appendicitis operation during the 1928 world series with the Yankees. Word of his operation was immediately flashed to New York.

The morning after the successful operation, Boze showed all visitors a telegram from an old pal on a desk job in New York. It read:

Timonium Meeting Under Way Today

The nearby racing scene shifts today to Timonium, just outside of Baltimore, where, with the exception of tomorrow which is an off day, the horses will compete for the remainder of the week. The following week Maryland will be without racing. A week later the major season opens at Havre de Grace.

Timonium racing, conducted in connection with a fair that is a fair, has proven popular for years and annually draws a large number of Washingtonians. The course opens the fall steeplechasing season in this section and features one of the timbertopper contests each day. In addition there are the usual seven flat races.

Today's program is featured by a 6½-furlong sprint which draws a limit field of 3-year-olds and upward, the majority of which have won at Cumberland or Marlboro, and an interesting battle is anticipated.

25,000 Expected at Stadium Tonight As Gallagher, Galento Fight Again

Galento-Gallagher Bout Tops 49-Round Card at Ball Park.

Dempsey Guest Referee; Many "Firsts" Among Attractions.

THE massive police benefit boxing card at Griffith Stadium tonight, headed by a return engagement between Marty Gallagher and Tony Galento, and featuring Jack Dempsey as guest referee, will practically exhaust the remaining supply of legalized boxing "firsts."

Advance sales already have assured the program of drawing Washington's big-time boxing crowd. Nearly 17,000 tickets have been disposed of by the Police Department, but no figures are as yet available on the sales of some 30 scattered distributing agencies. Officials confidently predict an attendance in excess of 25,000.

The Galento-Gallagher shambles, which is scheduled for 15 rounds, will be the Capital's first bout carded for more than 10 rounds. The Bob Wilson-Roy Manley semi-final will be Washington's first semiwindup scheduled for as many as 10 rounds.

49 Rounds Carded.

There are 49 rounds scheduled to be unreeled on the program, making the card the first to be lined up with more than 40. Because of the length of the card, it will commence at 8 p. m., thereby becoming the first boxing show to open before 8:30 p. m.

Tommy Cross and Eddie Cooper, a couple of colored lightweights, will open the festivities in a six-rounder, making the police card the first on which both colored and white fighters have shown. Each bout will have a different referee for the first time in the history of legalized boxing and Secretary Heinie Miller of the Boxing Commission will make his first legalized boxing appearance as a referee in the main event.

Commission Takes Nothing.

The main bout is scheduled to start promptly at 9:55 p. m. to synchronize with a radio hook-up, which marks the first time a Washington bout has been aired on any local station.

For the first time in its history, the Boxing Commission is not taking its 5 per cent of the gross gate receipts and all commission officials, including doctors, inspectors and referees, are working without compensation.

Gallagher, Galento, Wilson and Manley rested yesterday and all apparently were in the best of physical condition. Gallagher is expected to weigh slightly more than

"But not this time," says Marty Gallagher, Foggy Bottom's fighting Irisher, looking over an old issue of The Post containing an occount of a previous shellacking from Tony Galento, whom he meets tonight.

Reds and Pirates Split "Birkofer Day" Card

Cincinnati, Sept. 2 (AP).—Bombarding Cincinnati pitchers for 18 hits, the Pittsburgh Pirates walked away with the second game of a double-header here today, 11 to 4, after dropping the first one, 2 to 1.

Browns Take Two Over Chisox, 4-2,5-4

St. Louis, Sept. 2 (AP).—Home runs in both games enabled the St. Louis Browns today to sweep a double-header with the Chicago White Sox here, 4 to 2 and 5 to 4.

A homer by Campbell started the first game scoring and opened the way for a Brownie lead that was safe throughout the contest. The Browns started the second game two runs behind the Chisox, but timely circuit blows by Strange in the fourth and Clift in the seventh tied the score each time. The winning run came in the eighth on the strength of a double by Campbell and a single by Hemsley.

Dodgers Check Flag Rush of Giants, 7-3

Perfect Throw at Plate Helps Brooklyn End Losing Streak.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Sept. 2 (AP).—The Dodgers ended a losing streak, checked the pennant rush of the Giants and escaped with some consolation in their three-game series with the New York Club by winning the final game, 7 to 3, today.

Tom Zachary, veteran left-hander was the winning pitcher, although he had to be relieved in the eighth inning when the Giants scored one run and had the tying run on third base with one out. Mungo relieved him and made Critz, the next batter, ground to Frey, who threw him out at first. Watkins, a pinch runner, tried to score on the play and was doubled at the plate on a perfect throw by Johnny McCarthy, Brooklyn's rookie first baseman.

Take Safe Lead.

In their half of the eighth the Dodgers pounded Bowman, who had relieved Roy Parmelee, to build up a safe lead from Mungo in the ninth.

A single by Critz in the opening inning on which Boyle's fumble allowed the batter two extra bases gave the Giants a 1-run lead, which held up until McCarthy, a 21-year-old youngster from Chicago sandlots whom the Dodgers have had farmed at Dayton this year and who was playing his first major league game, singled to start a 3-run rally. After an infield grounder had advanced McCarthy to second, Koenecke singled to drive McCarthy across the plate. Later with two on and two out, Zachary helped win his own game with a looping single to center which scored both runners. Boyle's homer in the seventh increased the Brooklyn lead.

Detroit Gets But 1 Man on Third Base and 2 on Second.

CLEVELAND, Sept. 2 (AP).—Two clean hits were all the Detroit Tigers were able to get off Mel Harder today, and the Cleveland Indians tamed the league leaders, 1 to 0.

He also helped in the tallying of the Indians' lone run. Kamm reached first in the fifth inning by means of a pass, and was brought in by singles off the bats of Harder and Milt Galatzer.

Greenberg and Gehringer were the only Tigers able to nick Harder for a hit. The Tigers got one man as far as third base and only two as far as second.

Elden Auker, who until today had shutout the Indians twice in a row, and had allowed only one run in 26 innings against the Indians, was the victim of the Cleveland assault.

Braves and Phils Divide Twin Bill

Boston, Sept. 2 (AP).—The Boston Braves and the Philadelphia Phillies engaged in a pair of one-sided slugfests today to celebrate Walter "Rabbit" Maranville Day, the home team winning the first game, 11 to 2, and the Phillies shutting out the Braves, 12 to 0, before a crowd of 20,000.

Big Ed Brandt, Braves' ace southpaw earned his fourteenth victory of the season in the opener, fanning six Phils. Wally Berger drove in five of Boston's tallies, three of them with his thirty-first home run of the year in the fifth inning off Phil Collins.

Rabbit Maranville, veteran second baseman of the Braves, who broke his leg while sliding into home plate during training season at St. Petersburg, sat on the Boston bench for the first time since his injury, in late March.

The Washington Post Baseball Association Results and League Standings

Printers Tie Valets for Crown

Deadlock in Section B; Forfeit Gives 'A' Title to Pig 'n Whistle.

THE principal winner of the games of The Post Association leagues was King Vacation who staged a strong rally in his closing inning to lure a great part of the citizenry (ball players included) to the seashore and mountain resorts for the last holiday of the fast-fading summer. As a result of the exodus, but few of the scheduled games were played but these were productive of unusually good baseball.

The second-half championship in Section A was decided today when Hugh Waldrop's Pig 'n' Whistle nine was awarded a forfeit over the St. Joseph's nine when Manager Frank Cinotti was unable to round up nine eligible men. This was a sad blow to the hopes of the Congress Heights A. C., which would have finished in a tie with the Barbecuemen, had St. Joseph's defeated the outfit of Hugh Waldrop.

Printers Tie Valets.

In Section B, Manager Heinie Webb's Union Printer nine, by virtue of adding two victories to its string, were enabled to finish in a tie with the Blue Flame Valet nine for second-half honors. In the first game of a scheduled double-header, the Printers, getting back into their winning stride, hammered out a 7-to-2 victory over Willie Glascoe's Blue Coals. By the defeat, the Coalmen were put out of the running for the second-half flag. The second game of the double bill failed to materialize when the Rinaldi Coalmen were unable to get nine eligible men.

Hitting Babe Wesley hard, the Printers chased seven runs over the plate, while the Coalmen were held well in check by George Mosedale's five-hit pitching.

Printers Play Well.

The general all-around play of the printers yesterday was much better than their performance of last week. If they have hit their stride once more, they will give the Blue Flame nine plenty of trouble when the tie is played off next Sunday.

Fred Wahler and his Congress Heights boys are bemoaning the fact that the absence of one man kept them from finishing in a tie with Pig 'n' Whistle. In order not to disappoint the large crowd that had gathered for the game, Hugh Waldrop lent the St. Joe boys one of his men, and a practice game was played, which Frank Cinotti's boys won by the score of 8 to 0.

Middleburg Clinches Title in Section A, North Virginia

Manassas and Ballston Tie for Section B Crown; Open Three-Game Play-Off Series This Afternoon

THE pennant races in the Northern Virginia League came to a close and the final standings reveal the fact that Middleburg won the title in Section A, closely followed by the Arlington A. C. one game behind. In Section B, Ballston and Manassas finished in a dead heat, each winning nine and dropping only one.

Middleburg clinched the pennant by shutting out the Fairfax Station nine, 12 to 0; Arlington kept pace by downing Falls Church, 8 to 2; Park Lane, by its 11-to-5 victory over McLean, finished in a tie with that club.

Ballston shut out the White Star nine while Manassas buried Fort Myer Heights under an avalanche of hits to finish on top by 20 to 0. The second game of the scheduled double-header was awarded to Manassas by forfeit when Clarendon failed to put a team on the field.

Ninth Victory for Furr.

Earl McPherson pitched Arlington to another victory allowing Falls Church but four hits and striking out nine batters.

In Section B, Art Lacey made doubly sure that Ballston would at least finish in a tie when he shut out the White Star nine, 4 to 0. Lacey allowed but three hits and was never in danger.

Manassas in Rout.

Under a barrage of 19 hits, Manassas easily overcame the Fort Myer Heights nine. Shorty Vetter, Saunders and Reeves led the attack with three bingles apiece.

Today at Ballston, at 3 p. m., Manassas and Ballston will hook up in the first of a three-game series for the championship of Section B. The second game of the series will be played next Sunday at Manassas. The third game, if necessary, will be played at a time and place to be decided later.

Roseland's Five-Man Team Wins North-South Skeet Title by Two-Bird Margin

Kelly Takes Individual Crown

Loantaka Club Second and Waltham Third in Tourney.

CRACKING 474 birds, the powerful five-man team from Roseland (N. J.) Gun Club won the team title yesterday at the National Capital Skeet Club in the North and South championship, which also witnessed the crowning of Frank R. Kelly, of West Orange, N. J., as individual champion.

Renewing a skeet rivalry born several years ago, the Roseland quintet, paced by Champion Kelly's brilliant total of 98 for five shoots, defeated the Loantaka team, of Morris Plains, N. J., by a margin of two birds.

Others on Team.

Members of the winning team besides Kelly are Ed Garland, of Belleville, 410-gauge long champion, who accounted for 97 birds and won third prize in the individual championship; Frank Traeger, of Montclair, with 96; E. H. Klepstein, of East Orange, with 94, and C. W. Scranton, of East Orange, with 89.

Loantaka's shining light was Lou Delmonico, of West Orange, whose 97 tied him for second honors with Garland in the individual battle. Delmonico won in the shoot-off, breaking 23 to his opponent's 22. P. Conway, of Green Village, cracked 96.

Waltham Is Third.

The Waltham Gun Club, of Boston, of which Dr. R. G. Vance and his wife, Mrs. R. G. Vance, both National champions and winners of Saturday's 410-gauge short and women's titles here are members, finished fourth, six birds behind the Connecticut team, with 447.

Stone, Schulte Star as Nats Rout Yanks

victory, let hiself in for trouble in the first inning when he passed Stone. Manush and Joe Cronin followed with singles that produced the first run and Schulte followed with another base hit to make it 2-0. The Yanks got one run back in their half, but didn't earn it. Frank Crosetti opened with a single and ran all the way to third when Manush let the ball go through him. He scored when Jack Saltzgaver grounded out.

Duel Until Seventh.

From that point on the teams settled down for a real duel up to the seventh. Murphy hurled five shutout innings in a row, and the Yanks tied the score in the sixth when Crosetti singled, Saltzgaver sent him along to second with a sacrifice, and Babe Ruth brought him home with a single.

Then came the blow-off in the seventh. Stone and Cliff Bolton solved the youthful Fordham graduate for a pair of singles and Schulte smashed his triple, his third hit of the game, and brought the pair of them home to put the Nats in the lead.

Murphy Is Routed.

A double by Whitehill and Bluege's single that sent the Washington pitcher to third ended Murphy's tour of duty on the hill in the eighth. Russ Van Atta came in and Stone welcomed him by belting one into the rightfield stands for a home run.

Danny MacFayden pitched the final inning for the Yanks and was solved for two more runs on a single hit. The first thing he did was to walk Schulte. Pete Susko promptly clouted a triple. Then Kerr also drew a pass and Whitehill hit into a double play, allowing Susko to score the final Washington tally.

Pinch-Hitter Don Heffner enabled the Yanks to salvage a third tally in the ninth inning. He cracked a single to start a brief rally. Gehrig forced him at second, then was allowed to run to second and third without a play being made on him. Ben Chapman singled him home.

Grays Defeated.

In a hard-fought and well-played contest, featured by the pitching and hitting of 17-year-old Freemont Conners, the North Washington A. C. avenged an early season defeat when they took the measure of the Chevy Chase Grays. The score was 3 to 1.

Police Bouts

200 pounds—a very low figure for him—when the gladiators climb aboard the scales at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

Galento also has hammered his weight down considerably, and probably will tip the beam at the surprisingly low figure of 205 or 208 pounds.

Post's Predictions

Bouts are rated from A (excellent) to G (terrible).

Main event—Marty Gallagher, Washington, vs. Tony Galento, Newark, N. J., heavyweights; 15 rounds. Rated C plus. These two mastodons are both in excellent condition and both love to tear in and flail away when they are. Galento may stop the Irisher in two or three rounds, but he couldn't do it the last time, although he did batter him badly in taking a unanimous decision. Gallagher may have learned enough since then to whip Turn-Em-Over Tony. Personally, we think he has and will. Referee, Heinie Miller.

Preliminaries—Clarence (K. O. Burns), Baltimore, vs. Freddy Heinz, Saginaw, Mich., middleweights; 6 rounds. Rated D. Heinz should keep the crowd amused with his clowning, but he can't clown his way to a win over Burns, who is fresh from an impressive win over the highly-rated Al Diamond, of Paterson, N. J. Referee, Charley Reynolds.

Carl Hyde, Morristown, N. J., vs. Mel Sheppard, Baltimore, Md., heavyweights; 6 rounds. Rated E. Hyde should stop Sheppard. Referee, Denny Hughes.

Pete Bevans, Washington, vs. Al Parks, Baltimore; welterweights; 6 rounds. Rated E. Parks to win the decision. Referee, Kid Sullivan.

Tommy Cross, Philadelphia, vs. Eddie Cooper, Baltimore, colored lightweights; 6 rounds. Rated C. These boys threaten to steal the preliminary card. Cross is the classiest looking lightweight to show hereabouts with the possible exception of Harry Serody and figures to stop Cooper. Referee, A. A. Greene.

Getting 15 Hits, Martinsburg Wins, 11-3

Shoves Chambersburg Into Last Place; Roberts Goes Route.

MARTINSBURG, W. Va., Sept. 2 (Spl.).—Unloosing a batting attack which produced 15 hits, including the first home run hit in the local park this season, the Martinsburg Club shoved Chambersburg into last place in the Blue Ridge League standings here today, 11-3.

Three Chambersburg pitchers were unable to check the Sox, who scored in every frame but two. Chambersburg held the lead in the third but lost it in Martinsburg's half of the same inning. In the fourth, after Hassen had scored on Gregory's single, Hill sent one of Pitcher Shatzer's offerings over the left-field wall.

Roberts went the distance for the winners and was in command of the situation throughout. Cloud and Shockey for Martinsburg had perfect days at bat.

50 Candidates Report Today At Duke

Only Five 1933 Regulars Return; Work Will Begin at Once.

DURHAM, N. C., Sept. 2 Spl.).—Fifty candidates for Duke University's 1934 football team will report to Coach Wallace Wade tomorrow morning to start preparations for the coming gridiron campaign.

Uniforms will be issued and the candidates will get down to work immediately. Plenty of work faces both players and coaches before the opening game with V. M. I. at Lexington, Va., September 29.

Sixteen lettermen are in the list reporting, but only five of them were regulars on the 1933 team that gave Duke its best record in modern football. There are 11 reserves from the 1933 team and 23 sophomores.

Six Regulars Lost.

The coaches will busy themselves with the great task of filling the places left vacant by the six regulars, one alternate and two reserves who are gone. Most of the replacements will have to come from the 1933 subs and reserves, since, as a whole, the freshmen candidates made a poor showing in spring football.

The list invited to report:

Ends—Earle Wentz, Ed West and Ab Jones, lettermen; Frank Sizemore, reserve; Lee Arnold, Ed Rorke, Dick Taliaferro, Huber Hanes and Charles Hall, sophomores.

Tackles and guards—Gus Durner, O. C. Britton, Nick Porreca, Capt. Jack Dunlap, Jim Johnston and Roy Phipps, lettermen; J. K. Boling, Ned Quinn, Harry Collins, Henry Marshall and Sam Trakas, reserves; Lynwood Baldwin, Joe Cardwell, Tom Power, Weldon Bullock, Alex Copeland, Porter Greenwood, Water Meng and Kurt Roehrs, sophomores.

Maryland Archer Breaks 4 Records

Dr. John Baldwin Leads in Baltimore Tourney.

Football in Virginia . . .

JOHNNY, don your moleskins! Not to chase Indians like Daniel Boone and Davy Crockett did out in Ole Kaintuck many long years ago. Not to pave the way for the coming of a white race to the wilderness, as of old. Johnny dons his moleskins in this day and time to do and dare for alma mater on the football field.

Some 400 Johns and Joes and Sams and maybe a few Ivans and Oles left their homes a few hours since and headed toward some destination in Virginia. They are the boys who carry the hopes of rabid alumni and rah rah undergraduates on eleven Virginia campuses where the grand old game of football is starting up again.

While the country is busy glorifying the laboring man, Johnny puts on his moleskins and starts training prior to glorifying a few of alma mater's pet traditions. While the said laboring man rests, there is Johnny toiling under Monday's September sun.

No Gun Needed.

Johnny doesn't have to get his gun that they sang about so much back in the 'teens. But he will do well, nevertheless, to gird himself for battle if he wants to keep his standing up to scratch on the campus whose pride he is. Are not the very name and fame of alma mater in the world of sport threatened by rival hordes of gridmen? It's up to Johnny and Sam and Joe and the rest to do a lot and dare even more.

Every Virginia college campus, I dare say, is still trod by an element that feels that way about it, even though the campus outlook today is vastly different from what it was 20 years ago, or 10 years, or even 5 years ago. There are still the undergraduates whose thought from September to December is mostly on "the big team." They turn up their noses at the back-sliding brethren who are content just to get up once a year and sing that sacred chant about

Hail, oh hail, to thee.

But football, after all, is truly a grand old game. And in our Old Dominion we are still privileged to call it a sport and not a business.

Has Many Good Points.

It's good points tower imposingly over what few claims may be made against it here in Virginia. A lot of us will be lifted out of the humdrum mode now that the big linemen are getting down to business and the spirals are starting to zoom.

And how about these eleven college squads who will report for the training grind this week, the majority of them on Monday? Most of the squads show unmistakable signs of being stronger this year. What is known as football material has ever been none too plentiful at any Virginia institution of higher learning. And that is one infallible bit of evidence that the game is still a sport on Virginia gridirons and not a business.

The season's record of our eleven colleges and universities that sponsor teams may not be any more imposing from the standpoint of wins than it was last year. After all, where are more victories coming from if the other fellow is hurling against you a team just as much improved over last year as is your team? It all evens up; your gains have been neutralized.

Better Games Looked For.

But all this improvement does augur better games. Many a close, bitterly fought battle is in the offing in our stadia this autumn. In fact, it doesn't seem to be much to choose between seven of the eleven teams now in the offing. The squads are just starting along the rocky trail now, so it's too early to call the race a potential dead heat amongst these seven. That future developments, including the smiles and frowns of a fickle Dame Fortune, may make a whale of a difference—that's granted.

We have on file the name, position, height, weight, and experience of every player who is said to have a chance to play on the first, second or third team at these seven institutions. The coaches, publicity men and athletic directors likewise have dropped their hints concerning their respective chances of turning out an eleven that can "go places."

There isn't much difference in the strength of these seven: V. M. I., Virginia, Washington and Lee, University of Richmond, William and Mary, Virginia Tech, and Emory and Henry. A couple of them have a shade more of football material on tap. On the other hand, a couple of these institutions have a habit of getting a shade more out of what they have.

Roanoke Looks Improved.

Roanoke College, at Salem, one of the four members of the Virginia Conference, certainly ought to be stronger this year. The Maroons are starting their fifth year under Head Coach Gordon "Pap" White. "Pap" has on tap a potential backfield combination that most of the larger institutions may wish they could match ere the frost falls.

Now all that "Pap" needs is a veteran line to match his galloping ball toters. Head Coach Henry "Puss" Redd at Virginia Tech can probably sympathize with "Pap," his neighbor and contemporary, more feelingly than any other mentor right now. Redd recalls quite vividly the seven veterans he was going to unloose with footballs tucked under their arms a year ago. They were enough to do no little bit of stampeding in Virginia gridiron circles. But Redd never found a line that could open enough gaps or even at times get itself out of the way. Not that the fault was all in the line, by any means.

More Than Ball-Toters Needed.

Yep, my dear Juliet, Mr. Gordon "Pap" White has the ball-toters but he needs more than that in the face of that eleven-game schedule that opens September 15.

Matters gridiron are just about status quo in Death Valley, home of the Hampden-Sydney Tigers. Coach Charley Bernier, pilot of many a scrappy Hampden-Sydney team, has a line in the making. But as for back-field troubles—there's a bumper crop. Verily, it's a pity that "Pap" White and Charley Berner can't make believe they are major league moguls at an annual powwow. They could do some nifty bargaining in anybody's hotel lobby.

The only trouble is that "Pap" would have to turn up a couple of All-American ball toters to get the Ogden twins, powerful tackles, or Formwalt and Preston, crack flankmen, away from the Sage of Death Valley.

Eastern Shore Finals Gained By Youths

Wilson, 21, and Coltart, 18 Play for First Flight Golf Title Today.

CHESTERTOWN, Md., Sept. 2 (Spl.).—Two youngsters of the Delmar (Va.) Peninsula will fight it out for the golf championship of the Eastern Shore League tomorrow when the 36-hole finals will be staged. They are young Hayes Wilson, jr., 21 years old, of the Mapledale Country Club, of Dover, and young Sidney Coltart, 18, of the Greenhill Country Club, of Salisbury.

Harry Russell, of the local outfit, and Hayes Wilson, jr., shot very low rounds, going 3 over par and Wilson taking three extra holes to win for the final flight.

F. Bonville, of the Northampton Country Club, Cape Charles, Va., defeated E. H. Defries, of Salisbury, 9 up and 8 to go, winning the finals of the third 16 for a special medal and cup. All Chestertown players have been eliminated.

Columbias Win Over Vienna Firemen

Brenner Wins Mound Duel From Morland; Visitors Win Field Meet.

ALEXANDRIA, Sept. 2 (Spl.).—The Columbia, No. 4, defeated the Vienna Firemen today in an exciting and well-played game, 2-0. Both pitchers were in tight spots throughout but managed to work themselves out of most of the holes. Until the sixth inning, Morland was in rare form, but then he faltered. Langford singled, was sacrificed to second by Kersey, took third on Elliot's single and scored when Morland threw over the catcher's head for a wild pitch. The Columbias scored again in the eighth on a single, a walk, a stolen base and a fly to the outfield.

Fire Chief Starts Game.

Fire Chief Duncan started the game by throwing out the first ball.

Vienna walked away with the field events, taking three out of four contests. The results: Ball throwing — Kersey (Columbia); fungo hitting—Thompson (Vienna); running the bases—Nelson (Vienna); obstacle race—Boggs (Vienna).

Ann Harding Will Star in "The Fountain," Opening at RKO-Keith's Tomorrow

Slim Earnings Of "Last Yacht" Prompts Move

Abby Players Will Compete With Congress; Circus Fans Attention!

By Gerald G. Gross
(Batting for Nelson B. Bell).

Happy vacation to you, Nelson, and I trust you haven't let a bull into a china shop.

Hardie Meakin, who has a reason for whatever he does, announces that Ann Harding's "The Fountain" will replace "Down to Their Last Yacht," which tomorrow night will close its brief run at RKO-Keith's. The current feature at the Fifteenth street house will have had a long local showing, if you want to consider that it began in August and ends in September, but a more rational appraisal reveals that the two Sidneys (Fox and Blackmer) and their South Seas associates are being ousted after a mere five days.

Oh, yes, the reason if you haven't guessed it by now. Box-office disappointment. The new attraction opening Wednesday morning will be more successful, H. M. is sure. There's really no point of comparison between the two pictures, save for the water motif implied by their titles.

All of which should not lead you to believe the latest Harding production presents her and the rest of the cast cavorting fresco style in one of those famous Hollywood fonts or pools you've read so much about. "The Fountain" is just symbolism. Catch on?

Two years ago "The Fountain" came forth as a novel by Charles Morgan. It won high praise and, on the financial side, sold something like 200,000 copies. Now it's been turned into a movie, which should not be surprising, that "treats the eternal triangle in a big and noble way," as the genial manager of RKO-Keith's will tell you.

In support of the lovely Miss Harding will be Brian Aherne, of stage and screen; Paul Lukas, who can usually be depended upon to turn in a performance; Jean Hersholt, ditto, and Violet Kemble-Cooper, Ralph Forbes and Sara Haden.

Tempting Fare on Way.

Advance information is that Miss Harding plays the role of a woman beloved by Mr. Lukas, her husband, and by Mr. Aherne, whom we see as a young British aviator. There's your "Fountain."

Wednesday's premiere will serve to launch the new season of pictures at Keith's. Next on the schedule, as it shapes up at this writing, will be the United Artists production of "The Count of Monte Cristo," with Robert Donat essaying the title role which was carried by John Gilbert in the silent version years ago. Some may remember Mr. Donat for the part he played in Charles Laughton's "Henry the Eighth." Elissa Landi has the female lead in "The Count of Monte Cristo."

"The Age of Innocence," with John Boles and Irene Dunne, is next in line, to be followed by Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers in "The Gay Divorce." The Boles-Dunne combination hasn't been seen in Washington, if memory serves, since "Back Street" set records at the Rialto. And, of course, mention of Fred and Ginger should be the stimulus to recall their delightful Carioca number in "Flying Down to Rio."

A few adjectives back we mentioned Violet Kemble-Cooper in connection with the imminent opening of "The Fountain." It was she who bore the title role in that side-splitting production of "Lysistrata," which was such a sensation on Broadway several years ago. A statuesque, deliberative heroine, her Lysistrata was in marked contrast to the capricious wife—we forget the name Aristophanes gave her—presented by that talented young actress, whose screen likeness is on view at the Earle this week. Who? Guess! Give up? Miriam Hopkins.

Skipping off to Dublin, home of the Abbey Theater Players, word comes (via New York) that Washington again will have the opportunity to be entertained by their rich Irish productions during the coming legitimate season. The company has timed its visit to the Capital to coincide with the opening of Congress, meaning the first week in January. From here the players will go to Chicago, where they enjoyed extraordinary success in 1933.

Sailing for the United States on the twenty-ninth of this month, the company will open its season at Wellesley College on October 8. The New York engagement begins at the Martin Beck Theater on November 12, but first there will be a month or so of tune-up performances in Providence, New Haven, Hartford, Princeton, Albany, Springfield, Montreal, Quebec, Toronto and other Eastern cities.

A Generous Repertory.

Bookings after Chicago will take the Abbey troup as far as the West Coast, with stops scheduled at Kansas City, St. Louis and other places en route. San Francisco, Portland and Seattle are, among others, on the calendar. Returning eastward, the mid-way stage will be celebrated with performances at St. Paul and Minneapolis. The players will wind up their American tour, one of the longest theatrical trips on record, in Boston, departing for Ireland in mid-June.

Lennox Robinson, managing director of the Abbey company, will make part of the tour. Arthur Shields, assistant producer, will share with Elbert Wickes the responsibility of taking charge of the company.

The repertory includes the best-known plays of J. M. Synge, Sean O'Casey and Lennox Robinson, with Lady Gregory, Yeats, T. C. Murray, George Shields, Brinsley Macnamara, E. McNulty and Bernard Duffy also among the poets and playwrights represented.

Star of Midweek Opening

Shown above is Ann Harding, who comes to RKO-Keith's Theater Wednesday in "The Fountain," an eternal triangle drama based on Charles Morgan's novel of the same name.

Here's something to bear in mind, or clip out, for those of you who wish to select your standing space early for the Hagenbeck-Wallace circus parade two weeks from today. Starting out from the lot at Fifth street and Florida avenue northeast, it will proceed to Penn street, west on Penn to New York avenue, west on New York to Second street northwest, south on Second to Constitution avenue, west to Fifteenth, north to Pennsylvania, east to Third northwest, north to New York, east to M street, east on M to Sixth northeast and then north on Sixth street to the lot.

We take this means of acknowledging receipt of a kind invitation to attend the accordion concert which will be given by Jerome Damonte at 8:15 tomorrow evening in the "Playhouse," 1814 N street northwest. Mr. Damonte has undertaken an ambitious program whose numbers range from "St. Louis Blues" through "Dark Eyes" and up to "The Rosary" and "Vesta la Giubba," from "I Pagliacci." Reputed to be "America's greatest accordion soloist," he's likely to do them justice.

The tragic accident which befell Russ Colombo yesterday comes as sad news to his Washington admirers, both screen and radio. Probably the film for which he is best remembered here was "Broadway Through a Keyhole," shown at the Fox several months ago.

Born Ruggiero Eugenio de Rudolpho Colombo in San Francisco 26 years ago, he rose from farmhand and newsboy to the position of a high-salaried radio headliner. He made his screen debut in 1927 in "Wolf Song."

Over the Ocean.

Just in case the reference to the Irish players whetted your interest in what's going on theatrically across the big pond, these miscellaneous movie scraps are submitted: Poland—Sad tidings, most of the smaller houses having closed because they can't make expenses and domestic production suffering from lack of funds. Czechoslovakia—Brighter outlook; 260 pictures said to be ready for the coming season. Imports from Germany lead (106), with the United States a distant second (48) as concerns the country of origin. Only 37 are home products. French Equatorial Africa (My! My! How do you find out what's going on there?)—From now on all cinema-topographic film must be censored by the lieutenant-governor of the colony where the picture is to be shown. Film, text, scenario, posters and program all come under the ruling.

Who Remembers?

Gayety

"THE SPICES OF 1935." Independent Burlesk Association production in two acts and 24 scenes, featuring Dorothy Maye, with Vic Pland, John Rean, Frank Smith, John Grant, Rae Russell, Jean Rose, Margie Lee, and Lorimer & Carr. Dialogue by John Grant. Musical numbers staged by Solly Fields. Reviewed Sunday matinee by W. A. Whitney.

The 1934-35 season in the legitimate theater was formally and officially inaugurated yesterday afternoon when the good Col. James J. (Jimmie) Lake rang up the curtain at the Gayety Theater on "The Spices of 1935," the first attraction of the newly formed Independent Burlesk Association, of which our own impressario is the vice president.

Auspicious indeed was the opening, a record pre-Labor Day audience being regaled with a fast moving show with good singers, dancers, and comedians, all of which presages an excellent season for the association and for the followers pulchritude and music.

Though somewhat handicaped at the out set by the disappearance of the orchestral score of the show, the artists of both stage and pit soon hit their stride with a duplicate, but unmarked, score, and the show progressed without precipitible hitch. The mystery of the missing music was solved before the afternoon had passed.

Handicaped though the players were, the audience responded generously and often, reaching almost the point of stopping the show when Dorothy Maye appeared and convinced the onlookers that a burlesque queen could be a gracious artist without revealing all the attributes with which she is endowed.

Running a close second to Miss Maye was the team of Jack Lorimer and Paula Carr, a pair of clever tap and acrobatic dancers who can also double in the comedy skits.

Comedy of the week is in the capable bands of Frank Smith, who can get into more trouble with the English language than any other talk-twister, and Vic Plant, tramp comic. The two Johns—Grant and Head—handle the straight parts in expert fashion. Mr. Head, too, does the tenor warbling.

Among the other members of the company who contribute sparkling bits are Rae Russell, whose tap and toe dancing are top-notch; and Jean Rose and Margie Lee, who enliven the scene with songs.

A good looking and able chorus handles the ensemble numbers with a precision which should be even better when the regular score is played.

For the first time—at least, in recent years—a vague semblance of continuity runs through the entire first act, each skit carrying on a gossamer thread of narrative relating to the theft of a watch.

Stage Folk Mourn At Dillingham Bier

Crowd Outside Church Also Pays Producer Tribute.

New York, Sept. 2 (AP).—The people of the theater gathered at the bier of Charles B. Dillingham today and paid their last homage to the veteran producer who had helped so many of them along the tortuous road to stardom.

Outside "The Little Church Around the Corner" an overflow crowd, estimated by police at 1,000, stood silently as a quartet from the Lambs Club sang "Lead Kindly Light."

Among the mourners were Mary Reade, head of the Tiller Girls when Dillingham brought them from London; Janet Megrew, who starred for him; Jane Reilly, Trixie Friganza, Fred Stone, Dorothy Stone, George Jessel, Maj. Edward Bowes, Irving Berlin, Helen Broderick, Jerome Kern, Cora Witherspoon, Lee Shubert, Max Gordon, Sam Harris, Ernest Glendenning, Conde Nest, Nathan Burkan, George Rector and William F. Carey.

Woll Urges Church, Labor War on Reds

Moscow Ordered Coast Strike, He Claims.

New York, Sept. 2 (AP).—United action by the church and labor against Communism was urged by Matthew Woll, vice president of the American Federation of Labor, today. Woll declared that the San Francisco general strike was inspired by "orders from Moscow."

Recalling a meeting last week of the Jesuit Philospohical Association, Woll said the Rev. Edward A. Walsh, regent of the school of foreign service of Georgetown University, asserted at that time that "documentary evidence, in the form of a telegram, shows that the Third International at Moscow has ordered the Communist party in America to 'smear the NRA.'"

By Speed Kendall.

Hollywood, Sept. 2.—Public fancy is making a film star of a person whose name isn't even known to the studio presenting him. This strange situation was revealed yesterday by Pete Smith, who produces most of M-G-M's short subjects. Among them is a series of one-reelers called "Goofy Movies." These are assembled reels.

ROLAND YOUNG.

The film for these consists of cut-outs from old silent pictures made 15 or 20 years ago, when this industry was a youngster. By mere accident, Smith used as the hero-lover the same early day male character in several of the assembled films. Nobody today knows who he is or whether he is dead or alive.

But, ever since the one-reelers were released, Smith has been deluged with letters from fans wanting to know the identity of the Goofy Movie actor whose antics—done in a serious vein years ago—seem like burlesque when flashed on the screen today.

Pete has tried in vain to learn the fellow's name and establish his whereabouts since the irony of it all has aroused his interest. This unknown actor may turn out to be a box office attraction.

Just Another Worry.

A swarm of bees completely demoralized a picture company recently at the RKO Ranch. Wheeler and Woolsey were driving an old white horse hitched to a surrey for a scene in "Kentucky Kernels." The wheels accidentally knocked over a bee hive and the air became dense.

They seemed to concentrate on the poor horse and despite the danger to themselves, the comedians and a cowboy from whom the animal was rented, managed to unhitch poor Dobbin and turn him loose to flee from his attackers. The scene was delayed a couple of hours while a doctor applied soothing ointment to the comedians' stings.

Good Alibi.

Roland Young traveled 3,000 miles to get to Paramount by 9 o'clock one morning. Bing Crosby, star of the picture in which Young was to appear, had to go only five miles. But Young beat Crosby by an hour.

Young came from New York by overnight plane and made a wild dash to reach the studio on time only to discover Bing was late. Crosby had a perfect alibi, however, for Director Frank Tuttle. He said he was arrested for speeding and discovered he had lost his driver's license, and had to go to the motor vehicle department headquarters to get another before he could escape the toils of the law.

Award Received.

Anna Sten has received word that her home in Santa Monica Canyon, built by herself and her husband, Dr. Eugene Francke, received a special award from the National Jury of Modern Art of New York for progressive design and construction.

The home was designed for Miss Sten by Richard J. Neutra, Austrian-born architect. One feature is the wide view obtained through the unusual style of wide window space which Neutra terms "extensive fenestration." In line, it is as modern as the most unusual of the new business buildings in Germany and Austria which have been so widely discussed. Miss Sten supervised the landscaping and planted many of the flowers and shrubs herself.

Odd and Interesting.

The Bing Crosby-Richard Arlen $1,000 short-wave radio contest is about to start, but Bing is in a pickle. His wife (Dixie Lee) refuses to allow him to use the garage. It's too near the nursery and disturbs the Crosby twins, so Bing doesn't know where he's going to put his set.

These luncheons between Glen Boles and Maxine Doyle are getting pretty regular. . . Robert Gleckler welcomed home his wife and daughter, Bobbe, yesterday. Bobbe went East for a plastic surgery operation necessitated by an auto accident. . . Alice Brady is getting all that Nautch jewelry down on Olvera street.

June Collyer spent hours preparing special milk for their son, during a trip she and her husband, Stuart Erwin, took to New York. After boarding the train, they discovered they had left the milk at home. . . . Conrad Nagel and Sally Bates talking things over before show time in the Florentine room at the Roosevelt.

Larry Fine of the stooge team of Howard, Fine and Howard, remarked he was going to sea by rail yesterday when "The Captain Hates the Sea" unit went out on location on the bosom of the Pacific. Fine explained he can always be found by the rail when boat riding.

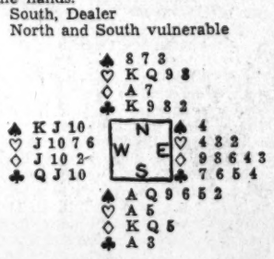
A Trump End-Play.

Vital statistics from all over the world assure us that the mortality rate in civilized parts of the globe is slowly but surely decreasing. Man will soon live to be 100 years of age and more, we are told, and perhaps will dance a jig on his 100th birthday. Meanwhile, due to the rapid progress which is made by Bridge players toward a fuller understanding of the principles of play, the mortality rate on defensive tricks attains a new high practically every day. It has become unsafe for any Bridge player to count even a guarded trump honor as a sure winner.

Today's hand shows how an unwise double of a Slam contract led the Declarer to find a means of robbing the doubler of a trick which it seemed that he could not lose. This end was achieved by means of a throw-in play which forced a lead into a trump tenace after all other suits had been stripped from the hands.

South, Dealer
North and South vulnerable



The bidding:

South	West	North	East
2♠	Pass	3♡	Pass
3♠	Pass	4♠	Pass
5♡	Pass	6♠	Pass
Pass	Dbl.	Pass	Pass
Pass

The bidding is very bad in every particular. South was far too weak for an Opening two-bid; but when he made his great overbid, North, with three spades and 2 and one-half honor tricks, should practically have forced a Slam by bidding four notrump. Instead North was content to reach a game, and left it up to South to make another unwarranted overbid—five hearts, which was an unquestioned Slam try. West was even more foolish to double; for he should, if he had played much Contract, have learned before this that his two apparent trump tricks were likely to become only one through the information afforded by his Double. If he had not already learned the lesson, then South must have proven a good mentor with his handling of these cards.

West's Opening lead was the club Queen, and the Declarer won this trick with the Ace. When he saw the Dummy he realized that he had but one chance of making the contract and that was that West held not more than three spades. His next play was to lay down the heart Ace and then the heart five. He returned the heart Queen, which he ruffed in his own hand, because it was essential if he were to fulfill the contract to shorten his own long trump holding. He then led his last club, winning with Dummy's King. A club was now returned, which was ruffed with his second trump. He now led the diamond five and won with the Ace in Dummy and returned a diamond to his own hand. He next returned his last diamond, which was ruffed with the eight in Dummy. His own hand was now void of all cards in the plain suits and at this point the heart nine was returned, which East ruffed, and South overruffed. The process of trump shortening had now been completed, and South confidently led the spade nine. West was forced to win, and then compelled to lead from the King-Jack up to the Declarer's Ace-Queen for a fulfilled contract.

In addition to the explanation of agricultural life at the Government's Beltsville research center, the day's program included horseback riding, a baseball game and various social activities.

Nebraska Ignores Drought to Open Gala State Fair

Lincoln, Nebr., Sept. 2 (AP).—It's State fair time in the corn belt and the drought has failed to spoil the fun.

The Nebraska Fair opened on schedule today with exhibition booths of grain and fruit, with stalls crowded by mooing, stomping, grunting live stock, and with fluttery banners and colorful throngs making the grounds lively as in days gone by.

To the knowledge of Perry Reed, secretary of the fair board, not a major exhibition in the Midwest has been called off because of drought or other adverse conditions.

"Maybe it's good fair weather after all," he said. "The farmers haven't much field work to do and would rather see a fair than kick their heels at home."

The lure of the fairs, like the lure of the circus, draws cash customers year after year.

"Same old thing," townsmen may say, but they go to the fair just the same.

And as a result the Illinois and Iowa fairs, as well as others in the corn belt, have enjoyed prosperous sessions. In some instances attendance records have been eclipsed.

Chicago, Sept. 2 (AP).—Louis S. Hungerford, jr., 40, son of a vice president of the Pullman Co., and Miss Don Rose, 33, a beauty parlor operator, were found shot to death in a near North Side apartment today.

Police said apparently Hungerford shot and killed Miss Rose and then killed himself. There were signs of a struggle in the room.

Pittman Held Certain Victor In Nevada Vote

Faces First Opposition in 22 Years in Primary Tomorrow.

Reno, Nev., Sept. 2 (AP).—Friends of United States Senator Key Pittman predicted his renomination today as Nevada voters prepared to choose party candidates Tuesday for Senator, Governor and scores of lesser offices.

Despite the fact he faced primary opposition for the first time since 1912, Pittman appeared to have the inside track for the Democratic designation, although pressed closely by H. R. Cooke, Reno attorney, who waged a heated campaign.

The cry that Pittman was an ally of the so-called bipartisan political "machine" headed by George Wingfield, Republican National committeeman, was raised by Cooke in his appeal for votes. This was disavowed by Pittman, who based his campaign mainly upon his record in the Senate and his activities in behalf of silver.

New Deal Platform.

Bob Moore, young Las Vegas businessman and State legislator, was another candidate seeking to depose the president pro tempore of the Senate and chairman of the important Foreign Relations Committee.

Three candidates seek the Republican Senatorial nomination, with State Engineer George W. Malone, a former National vice commander of the American Legion, the apparent favorite.

Opposing him were Clyde D. Souter, Reno attorney and former Jersey City, N. J., jurist, and August Frohlich, Reno justice of the peace and former speaker of the State Assembly.

Hot Gubernatorial Fight.

While National attention focused on the outcome of the vote for Senator, the State itself was engrossed in its most heated gubernatorial fight in recent years.

Six candidates seek the Democratic gubernatorial designation, including Richard Kirman, sr., Reno banker, former Representative Charles L. Richards, John Cooper, retired Reno merchant; Harley Harmon, of Las Vegas, district attorney of Clark County, and Archie Grant, Las Vegas business man.

James G. Scrugham, lone Nevada Representative in Congress, is unopposed for the Democratic Congressional nomination, and State Treasurer George B. Russell is the only candidate for the Republican nomination.

N. Y. Banker Under Knife.

New York, Sept. 2 (AP).—George F. Baker, chairman of the First National Bank, was a patient at Doctor's Hospital tonight, recovering from an abdominal operation. His condition was described as satisfactory.

Radio Waves and Ripples

By George M. Adams, Jr.

LABOR DAY parades, boat races, water carnivals, dedications, pow-wowing Indians and significant addresses by Government and labor officials offer varied radio fare today . . . but that won't prevent twinges of nostalgia among listeners packing suitcases while bidding a wistful adieu to canoe paddles and summer romance.

Excitement starts this morning on WMAL at 10:30 when "Big Jim" Farley awards a trophy to the winner of lifeboat races on Gotham's Hudson River . . . then at 12 noon WRC carries an address by William Green, president of the A. F. of L. A half hour later Washington's Labor Day parade starts with Bob Trout at C. B. S.'s mike.

This afternoon finds Frank Morrision, secretary of the A. F. of L. on WMAL at 2 p. m. . . . Secretary of War Dern and Col. D. M. Sutherland, Canadian Minister of National Defense, with discussions of Canadian-American amity on WRC and WJSV at 2:45 p. m. . . . while Secretary of Labor Francis Perkins discusses the current labor situation on C. B. S. networks (only) at 3:45 p. m. William Green speaks again for Columbia at 6:15 p. m.

Seems that while Messrs. Coyle and Trout were warming up to report the Galento-Gallagher bout at Griffith Stadium at 10 p. m., Arch coaxed that fisticuffer, Jack Dempsey, into a corner and got his promise to appear at the McDonald mike.

POUNDING the pavements for many months, Harris B. Hull, the energetic Postilion, has sauntered over to WMAL's studios on Eleventh street with a particular zest. Yesterday Hull left for a week's assignment with the New Jersey "war games" . . . the following two weeks he'll be on vacation thus giving one long pause to his broadcasting activities.

Listeners who heard John Heiney, of The Post staff, who replaced Hull yesterday on the Postilion may not know, however, that Mr. Heiney spoke from new studios set up right here in the Post Building. Hull heard about this and remarked:

"John's too lazy."

Ripples.

Growth of automobile radios, clamoring fan mail, and a pile-up of new talent is prompting C. B. S. in a drive for daytime listeners. . . . Mrs. Roosevelt tells why a woman should be President tomorrow at 8:30 p. m. on N. B. C. . . . Ogden L. Mills, former chief of doubloons, speaks on the "U. S. Constitution" September 17 at 3:30 p. m. on C. B. S. . . . The voice of a diver as he walks and swims under 30 feet of water comes to the air Friday at 12:30 p. m. on N. B. C. . . . "The Voice of Experience" resumes his broadcasts September 10 at 11 a. m. on C. B. S. . . . Columbia augments its network September 15 with its one hundredth unit in the person of station KWKH, Shreveport, La., (1100 k. c.-10,000 watts) . . . Records just compiled by the Federal Communications Commission disclose 46,390 amateur stations in existence at the close of the last fiscal year . . . And Clara, Lu 'n' Em are back today on WRC at 9:15 a. m. . . . Columbia returns Edwin C. Hill to its networks today at 7:15 p. m. and the first fall episode of "Buck Rogers" resumes at 5 p. m. . . .

Ferd Grofe, noted for his orchestration of "Rhapsody in Blue," has been m' c'ing his "Americana" on C. B. S. networks Sundays at 9:30 p. m. with the success that might be expected of a descendant of four generations of musicians.

CLAUD WARD, who has been handling droves of talented youngsters on his Children's Frolic heard Saturdays at WMAL, will boost the time to 8 a. m. beginning tomorrow morning. One of the most interesting programs of its kind, listeners will hear what fresh morning air does to youngsters who play trumpets, tap dance and sing solos. This program will not interfere with the 11 a. m. spot—just an experiment in getting young folks up in the morning.

Whitecaps.

WRC—Return of Clara, Lu 'n' Em in "Over the Back Fence" gabfests, 9:15 a. m.; address by William Green, president, A. F. of L., 12 noon; dedication of old Fort Niagara with speeches by Secretary of War Dern and Donald M. Sutherland, Canadian Minister of Defense, 2:45 p. m.; men's National tennis championships, 6:30 p. m.

WMAL—Tony Won's Scrapbook, 10:15 a. m.; lifeboat race, 10:30 a. m.; Frank Morrison, secretary, A. F. of L., 2 p. m.; Senator Davis Walsh, of Massachusetts, 9:45 p. m.; fight broadcast from Griffith Stadium, 10 p. m.

WJSV—Labor Day parade, 12:30 p. m.; Jones' Beach Water Carnival with Ted Husing, 1:30 p. m.; Secretary Dern, 2:45 p. m.; Secretary Perkins, 3:45 p. m.; men's tennis singles, 4:15 p. m.; William Green, president, A. F. of L., 6:15 p. m.; Arch McDonald interviews Jack Dempsey, 7 p. m.; Edwin C. Hill, 7:15 p. m.; pageant drama of old Niagara, 9:30 p. m.; fight broadcast, 10 p. m.

LAWRENCE TIBBETT, vibrant, rich-voiced barytone, heard heretofore on the air as a vocal performer only, will be starred in a new triple role Tuesdays from 7:30 to 8:15 p. m. over N. B. C. networks starting September 18.

He will enact famous roles he has created for the operatic stage and screen . . . take part in dramatizations based on his own life . . . and as a man rather than an artist, he will discuss general topics with John B. Kennedy, radio commentator, and tell anecdotes about himself and celebrities he has known, with comments on music and musicians.

Pennies Launch Marriage.

Strange as It Seems —By John Hix

Strange as it seems, railroads came before railroad locomotives. A variety of methods were tried for power before the development of the steam engine. The original railway power was the horse. Back as far as the sixteenth century they were using horsepowered railroads in England to move heavy freight.

Many other devices were tried before steam hauled passengers and goods on railroads. Among these old-time power plants was the rather unsuccessful sail car illustrated above. It was hoped that the sail car could be navigated over railroad tracks like a sailing ship is navigated at sea. A few attempts proved otherwise. The car could not tack, hence could not sail into the wind like a ship; it moved along fairly well with the wind, but a stiff breeze to the side would blow it right off the tracks.

Air conditioning and ventilation systems are older than man's ingenuity. Honeybees deserve credit for the invention, because they have their own system of furnishing fresh air into the hive. Crews of bees stand at the entrance of the hive and fan their wings, circulating fresh air through the opening.

Walt Mason, Himself

In the Heat.

We are standing in the street, and we blither and we bleat, of the all-pervading heat. "Tell us, in the name of Pete, of some pleasant, cool retreat, full of ice and snow and sleet; life would there indeed be sweet; but alas, we only meet with a warmth that can't be beat; every delegate we meet says he's roasting on his feet, every citizen we greet longs for shroud and winding sheet, life is surely not a treat in this steaming, sizzling heat." Now arrives the village vet; he is streaming, he is wet with varieties of sweat he is not likely to forget. And he says to us, "You bet, it will be much hotter yet, we have just begun to fret. It is true the heat's a fright, but methinks it serves us right, we should greet it with delight, we should boost it day and night, and proclaim it a delight. All last year we had a fog thick enough to choke a dog, and before the synagogue we were croaking like the frog that infests the slimy bog. Up and down the street we'd jog, calling on the great god Gog to disperse the slimy fog. 'Let the bright sun shine again on the spinney and the fen, on the dingle and the glen, and we'll all be happy men;' we were sick for sunshine then. In response to our appeal came the sunshine, reel on reel, it is with us and we feel that we get a crooked deal, and we wrangle and we spiel, on our marrowbones we kneel, asking winds that will congeal. We are surely hard to please; when we're hot we wish to freeze, when we're cold we long to sweat, we are chumps, already yet," said the sweating village vet.

Federal Bonds Point Lower; Others Resist

Softness of U. S. Group Attributed to Government Financing Plans.

New York, Sept. 2 (AP).—The declining trend of United States Government securities caused some nervousness in the bond market during the past week, but most corporation loans were not exceptionally depressed.

Federal issues were in supply throughout and there was little indication of any substantial support by the Treasury. Dealers attributed the softness of this group partly to uncertainty regarding Washington's forthcoming financing operations involving more than $1,700,000,000.

The sharp decline of the British pound sterling, with its implications of a "currency war" and possible further depreciation of international exchanges, was also seen as a selling factor.

Gossip on Financing.

While bankers, generally, believed that the $525,000,000 of certificates which mature on September 15, would be refunded in the usual manner, which was later confirmed by Secretary Morgenthau, faint rumors were heard that the Treasury might decide to pay off this indebtedness with cash.

So far as the $1,200,000,000 of Liberty Fourth 4¼s, called for October 15, are concerned, there was no doubt but what some conversion offer would be made to holders of these bonds. The refunding terms, it was announced, will be made public on September 10.

Government loans exhibited mild rallying tendencies following the address of Treasury Secretary Morgenthau in which he said that the "profit" of about $2,800,000,000 derived from the reduction of the dollar's gold content, would be kept "under lock and key" for some time. It was stated, however, that ultimately it was expected this "profit" would be used to cut the National debt.

Prime Bonds Dull.

Prime investment corporate bonds were dull but fairly steady, there were several strong spots due to individual circumstances, rail liens were the principal sufferers. The plea of the roads to the Interstate Commerce Commission for an increase in rates disclosed the precarious financial situation in which a number of the roads now find themselves.

In the foreign section German bonds exhibited weakness. The Young and Dawes plan issues bore the brunt of liquidation in this group when Dr. H. Jalmar Schacht, president of the Reichsbank, announced that the coupons of these loans would not be paid. The list suffered another drop when the Reichsbank official later said that Germany should have an indefinite moratorium on her foreign indebtedness.

South American obligations, including Thoe of Argentina Chile, Peru, Uruguay, Colombia and Brazil, developed strength. British bonds sagged coincident with the relapse of the pound.

Hayes Urges Youth To Defend Nation

Peoria, Sept. 2 (AP).—Edward A. Hayes, National commander of the American Legion, tonight warned members of Young People's church societies that "strange tenets" are seeking to destroy the principles, freedom and democracy, upon which the Nation is founded.

"We find in too many instances organizations of young men, even Christian young men, taking oath not to bear arms in a National emergency," he told a gathering at the Central Christian Church.

Pair Plan Sea Flight To Enter Trophy Race

Los Angeles, Sept. 2 (AP).—George R. Hutchinson, first aviator to attempt an ocean flight with his entire family, and Dan Beard, veteran pilot, hopped off here today for Cleveland on the first lap of a projected flight to London to enter the Melbourne Trophy race.

They said they planned to start the transatlantic flight from Newfoundland.

Former Star to Marry, Wears 20-Carat Ring

New York, Sept. 2 (AP).—Nanette Guilford, former Metropolitan opera star, disclosed tonight she planned to be married within a month to Martin Peck, British millionaire. Peck is expected to arrive from London in about three weeks.

Miss Guilford displayed a 20-carat diamond ring which she said Peck gave her.

Wheat Surplus Solution Seen.

Ottawa, Sept. 2 (AP).—John I. McFarland, Canada's member of the World Wheat Advisory Committee, asserted today that shortage of coarse grains for stock feed would end the wheat surplus problem temporarily at least.

Retail Sales Gain Unexpectedly In August; Outlook Brightens

Trading During Past Week Is Stimulated by Slightly Cooler Weather and Assemblage of Clothing and Accessories in Preparation for School Terms.

New York, Sept. 2.—Running contrary to the expected trend, the day-by-day comparisons with a year ago reveal an increase in retail sales in August, with volume for the past week topping that of the week preceding by 3 to 8 per cent. For the first half of August sales range from a low of 5 per cent to a high of 30 per cent larger than during the same period of 1933, the most impressive percentages of increase emanating from the South and Southwest.

The outlook for retailers has turned distinctly brighter during the last two weeks, as stocks of summer merchandise have been about cleared, particularly in country districts, where farmers are in daily receipt of cash from their freshly gathered harvests. Besides, the higher prices being received for grains, live stock and other farm products are expected to lift fall sales fully 15 to 20 per cent above the totals recorded in 1933.

A noteworthy change during the week was the brighter view of the future taken by workers in industrial centers, where opening of deferred payment accounts exceeded the number at this period last year by nearly 100 per cent.

Stimulated by Weather.

Retail trade during the week was stimulated not only by the slightly cooler temperatures in many parts of the country and the increased attention given the August promotional events, but much of the enlarged volume was due to the assemblage of clothing and accessories in preparation for fall terms of schools and colleges.

Such purchases centered around dresses of silk, velveteen, metal-shot wools, tunics for daytime and evening, knitted ensembles for sport occasions, fur-trimmed tweed coats for the football games and plaid skirts and gay-colored sweaters to brighten up the campus. In fact, sporting goods and sportswear took their place alongside school clothing in the heavier purchases made during the week.

Midseason stock-moving sales now are about over, with retailers reporting not only a satisfactory volume of business, but that no drastic price reductions were necessary to clear the remnants of summer goods. Interest now is shifting rapidly to fall apparel, but owing to the continued warm weather, dull crepe tunic dresses, trimmed with moire silk, velvet ensembles and jackets, taffeta frocks for the cocktail hour, knitted sportswear, jersey blouses, and silk frocks in dark tie prints somewhat outdistanced the sales of suits and tweed coats.

Fall Millinery Sales.

Sales of fall millinery have surged upward, the interpretations of the new mode running to the pill-box shapes, the bizarre delineations of the beret, and the jaunty variations of the Francois Villon rakish angles and contours affording a wider sales appeal than the uninspiring "petite cloche," which was the only style on which to draw for so many seasons.

Stocks of novelty summer footwear have been about cleared by the special sales, even though markdowns were not so wide as expected, because of the higher trend which leather goods have taken. Fall shoes have not been featured to any extent, as yet, some stores planning to defer the showing of these until September.

Because of favorable purchases during the summer, when hide prices were declining rapidly, early offerings of shoes may not show much of an advance over the prices obtaining last spring, but retailers who did not fully cover their requirements at that time will be forced to place higher price tags on the goods now being acquired.

In the men's clothing departments, it was the white linen suits, tropical worsted suits, sport coats and plain and patterned flannel trousers and slacks which sold in the largest number, although some attention was accorded the early showings of fall merchandise.

Final Clearances.

These final clearances of men's summer clothing have been favored by continued hot weather in many parts of the country, and retailers are closing one of the most successful seasons they have had in four or five years. Stocks have been entirely cleared in many stores, not only of clothing, but of summer shirts, neckties, bathing suits and novelty hosiery. Sales of straw hats were a disappointment in many sections this season, and fewer were moved than a year ago.

Judging from the generous response which is being given August fur promotions, women were preparing for a long cold winter even before the weather forecasters came out with an official announcement to that fact. In many cities, the number of garments thus far sold has been double that of last year, in spite of the fact that interest has been strongest for the medium and higher-priced coats of Hudson seal, mink, Alaska sealskin, caracul, leopard and beaver.

Swagger coats have come in for a good share of attention, particularly those of American broadtail, silver and dark muskrat, nutria and fitch. Even for the new evening capes of silver fox, ermine and Hudson Bay sable, sales have been running larger than expected.

Many department stores extending the deferred payment plan to their customers have opened nearly twice as many accounts as last year, indicating that business women, who form the major portion of such purchasers, now have greater confidence in the security of their positions.

Silver Nationalization.

The nationalization of silver has done more than to expand the currency issue, for it has brought a renewed interest in silver plate. It is estimated that more silverware has been sold during the past two weeks than during any comparative period in more than a year. Purchases have not been confined to plated silverware, but have extended to solid silver tea and coffee services, vases, ash trays and an imposing array of decorative articles.

Bedroom suites in the modern design, breakfast nook sets, kitchen equipment, and odd chairs have had the advantage thus far from a volume standpoint in the August furniture sales. Upholstered chairs were more prominent in the demand than a week earlier, particularly those covered with damask and brocatelle.

In living room furniture, book cabinets, chests, sofa tables and coffee tables in period designs have been in more request than complete suites. In some stores, rugs have been moving better than furniture, with the specially-priced Orientals making a particularly good showing.

Curb's Prices Decline Again In Dull Sales

Gains of Previous Week Almost Lost; Trading Averages Less.

New York, Sept. 2 (AP).—Curb stocks worked slightly lower in dull trading last week and the improvement registered in the previous week was virtually canceled.

A few specialties were resistant, but the majority of shares, including representative oils, utilities and metal, were easier.

The lower trend got under way on Monday. Irregular movements followed and fluctuations were narrow at all times.

Puget Sound preferred issues moved up sharply at mid-week but encountered profit taking later. Both Swift & Co. and Swift International established new highs for the year and closed around their best levels.

Gold shares were a bit firm on Wednesday, Lake Shore advancing 2⅜ points. Hiram Walker moved moderately ahead as did Distillers Corporation-Seagrams. Other distillery issues ruled steady.

In the power group, moderate losses were suffered by American Gas & Electric, Commonwealth Edison, Columbia Gas & Electric preferred and Electric Bond and Share.

American Cyanamid B and Libby, McNeil & Libby were steady, while Pittsburgh Plate Glass, Aluminum Co. of America, Gulf Oil and A. O. Smith attracted scattered selling. Trading in shares of Standard Oil of Indiana was transferred to the big board on Thursday. The average daily turnover declined to about 120,000 shares, compared to around 150,000 the previous week.

Trade Outlook Still Continues To Improve

Some Uncertainties Lift; Goods Inventories Drop; New Buying Due.

New York, Sept. 2.—In its weekly summary of the general business situation, the Standard Statistics Co., of New York, currently comments as follows:

"A number of uncertainties in the business situation have been lifted, although such factors as the serious strike situation and more open opposition to restrictive Governmental activities remain distinctly unsettling.

"Nevertheless, a somewhat better feeling has developed in some sections of the country, and broad industrial trends over early future months should be upward.

Alleviation of Fears.

"Alleviation of monetary fears alone has been responsible for a considerable improvement in business sentiment, as it allows a more secure basis for business planning.

"Indications are still accumulating, moreover, that the summer decline in production has ended, and several basic indicators are turning upward.

Material progress obviously will await the passing of Labor Day, but subsequent average trends should show gradual improvement, with gains concentrated mainly in consumer goods lines.

Goods Inventories Depleted.

"That inventories of such goods have been largely depleted is shown by the well maintained production volume. Thus, at least a moderate amount of new buying apparently must be forthcoming in the early future to satisfy fall requirements.

"The array of statistics recently presented by the Administration as a survey of the "New Deal" to date again places emphasis upon the present improved position, as compared with the depths of the depression, and suggests a continued ability to maintain a good part of the gains already registered. Particularly is purchasing power in certain of the agricultural sections being expanded, and further benefits currently are being derived from continued strength in farm product prices and improved weather conditions.

"From a somewhat different angle, sentiment likewise is being bolstered by intimations from Washington of a probable overhauling and coordination of the entire series of New Deal activities, in an effort to simplify their administration, eliminate inconsistencies and rebuild confidence."

Order of Rechabites Meets Here Tuesday

The eighty-second annual convention of the High Tent of the Independent Order of Rechabites in North America will be held here Tuesday in the tent room of Eagle Tent, No. 2, Naval Lodge Hall.

At the evening session, beginning at 8 p. m., a reception will be given officers and representatives of the High Tent by local tents. An address of welcome will be delivered by High Chief Ruler William Tinney, of New Jersey.

J. Raymond Schmidt, lecturer of the International Reform Federation, will deliver an address on temperance, after which a buffet supper will be served.

Stocks Yield Bulk of Gains Under Selling

Variety of Factors Cause Slump in Trading as Dealers Wait.

New York, Sept. 2 (AP).—Bullish confidence seemed to be on the wane in financial markets this week.

Stocks moved lower, relinquishing the greater part of their gains the preceding week. Softness cropped out in bonds, particularly United States Government issues, and commodities on the whole fluctuated narrowly.

The outlook for a seasonal expansion in business was further obscured by the textile strike call and a sharp fall in the British pound, reviving fear that depreciation in sterling currencies would renew pressure on prices in countries on the gold standard.

The pound dropped below $5 and, in terms of the French franc, was at a record low.

Under the circumstances, security markets showed little enthusiasm over the announcement by Secretary Morgenthau that the Administration expected eventually to use a profit of $2,800,000,000 arising from devaluation of the dollar to reduce the National debt.

A persistent dribble of selling wore away stock prices, but volume of trading dropped to around 400,000 shares yesterday.

Railroad shares were not helped by a move on the part of the carriers for higher freight rates to absorb rising costs. July earnings statements of the railroads showed a further sharp fall in net operating income out of proportion to the decrease in gross.

A variety of factors combined to prolong the waiting attitude the stock market has manifested in recent weeks. Among them were the continued absence of signs of seasonal business improvement, impending Treasury financing involving $1,700,000,000, the Maine elections September 10 and the effect on the dollar of the break in sterling.

Heavy industry curtailed operations a little more. Steel operations were estimated to have fallen to about 19 per cent of capacity, the lowest since the banking holiday period in March, 1933. Motor car manufacturers reduced schedules along seasonal lines. Railroad carloadings showed less than the gain usual for this period of the year.

Two Children Die In Camp Tent Fire

Parents Rescue Third Child at Ocean City, Md.

Ocean City, Md., Sept. 2 (Spl.).—Fighting their way through a blazing tent near here today, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Hann, of Chester, Pa., saved one 4-month-old baby but were unable to save the boy's twin brother and 3-year-old sister.

The children were on a week-end camping trip with their parents. The tent in which they were sleeping caught fire about 2 a. m. The parents were awakened by the flames and ran to the tent in an effort to pull the children to safety.

The girl was hurried to the Peninsula General Hospital at Salisbury, Md., but died several hours later. The boy was dead when taken from the tent.

Washington Business Angles

A potential effect of the securities and exchange act seen by one official will be to prevent stock-watering and overappraisals.

This does no mean that the Securities and Exchange Commission is empowered to act against indulging promoters or corporations, but simply that all the details of appraisal and stock issue will be laid out in the registration statement which ultimately must be filed with the commission.

This official expressed the belief it would be a hardy corporation or promoter that would describe in detail the stock-watering said to have gone with the development of some industries.

Of especial note, he said, will be the effect of the act in regulating public utility holding companies, which have been charged in the Government's investigation with overappraisals and valuation "write-ups."

The commission does have some regulatory power aside from the mere publication of the details about a stock transaction, for by Administration it virtually can force a prospective issuer to tell so much that the issue will not be forthcoming.

This actually has happened in several cases before the securities division of the Federal Trade Commission.

The public, in itself, may not be able to judge the defectiveness of an issue, but there are a great many outside experts whose duty it is to advise investors, and they will very quickly spot any doubtful deals.

The commission can not stop an issue unless the issuer declines to give details, but it can force those details onto the record.
